THE TEXT IS LIGHT IN THE BOOK

"The law is progressive and expansive, adapting itself to the new relations and interests which are constantly springing up in the progress of society. But this progress must be by analogy to what is already settled."

Chief Justice Greene, in 1 R.I. 356.

EXPLANATION

THE object in view in preparing Corpus Juris Secundum has been two-fold: First, to provide a complete encyclopedic treatment of the whole body of the law, which means that it must be based upon all the reported cases; Second, to present each title of the law in form and content most suitable as a means of practical reference for the Bench and Bar.

Corpus Juris Secundum is therefor a complete restatement of the entire body of American Law. The clear-cut and exhaustive propositions comprising the text are supported by all the authorities from the earliest times to date. The supporting case citations, conspicuously set out in the notes, point to all decisions handed down since the publication of Corpus Juris When the searcher may wish to consult earlier authorities, a specific reference to Corpus Juris makes available all cases back to 1658.

Each title is preceded by a complete section analysis, greatly simplified to facilitate research Where the scope of any section is such as to require it, a more minute analysis is found thereunder in its appropriate place within the title (see Abatement and Revival, Section 112) The convenience of this method—an innovation in encyclopedic writing—must immediately commend itself.

A concise black-letter summary, indicative of its scope, precedes the full treatment or statement of the law under each section These introductory summaries, concise and free from interlineation of authorities, have proven of great convenience and value in legal research.

An index is found in the back of each volume covering the titles contained therein, thus providing another convenient means of ready access to the text and notes.

Corpus Juris Secundum is kept to date by means of annual cumulative pocket parts for each volume This feature of supplementation which has proved so successful in modern digests and statutes conveniently, and with certainty, keeps each title constantly to date through current cases and new precedents.

Corpus Juris Secundum represents the combined product of the highest editorial talent and manufacturing skill Its many excellent editorial features are fittingly accompanied by corresponding innovations and improvements in mechanical arrangement, typography, and design, which the publisher believes will commend themselves to the profession as representing a new standard in legal publications.

except to the extent that they conflict with particular constitutional provisions[31] A statutory regulation which tends to promote efficient and uninterrupted performance of work performed under command of the state, to carry out an obligation owed to the state, on a highway of the state, is not beyond the power of the state[32]

A judgment that under existing law the state has no power to make a certain highway contract does not preclude the subsequent enactment of a statute retroactively empowering the state to make such a contract[33]

Validity of state appropriations in aid of construction of roads under constitutional provisions pertaining to works of internal improvement is considered in the C J S title States § 140, also 59 C J. p 212 notes 74, 79, p 213 notes 87, 88

c. Construction and Operation Generally

(1) Constitutional provisions
(2) Statutes

(1) Constitutional Provisions

The words "construction and maintenance" in a constitutional provision authorizing statutes as to state highways should be given a broad construction. An amendment authorizing a bond issue should not be construed to enlarge the state highway system unless such intention is plainly manifested.

Wis —State v Zimmerman, 204 N W 803, 187 Wis 180

(15) Statute relating to road construction on a retaining wall along a beach —Ladner v Road Protection Commission, 116 So 602, 150 Miss 416

(16) Bill providing for leasing to highway department by state bridge corporation of all its bridges and other property terms and conditions thereof, and making appropriation therefor —In re Opinions of the Justices, 145 So 820, 226 Ala 165

(17) A statute authorizing road improvement district to use district funds in part payment of cost of building new bridge over small nonnavigable river crossed by road — McAdams v Henley, 273 S W 355 169 Ark 97, 41 A L R 629

(18) Statute pertaining to an election on the question of adopting a road unit system, although it fails to provide for notice of election - State ex rel Beck v Board of Com'rs of Allen County, 57 P 2d 450, 143 Kan 898

(19) Statute requiring approval of state highway director for the erection of signal lights —Village of Englewood v Bettis 30 Ohio N P ,N S , 491

33. Idaho —Powell v McKelvey, 53 P 2d 626, 56 Idaho 291.

The words "construction and maintenance" in a constitutional provision authorizing the legislature to enact a statute for the construction and maintenance of state highways should be given a broad rather than a narrow construction.[34] A constitutional amendment authorizing a bond issue for highway purposes should not be construed to enlarge the state highway system except where such intention is plainly manifested.[35]

(2) Statutes

The usual principles of statutory construction are applied to statutes pertaining to the construction, improvement, or repair of highways

The usual principles of statutory construction are applied in determining the legislative intent expressed by the terms of statutes pertaining to the construction, improvement, or repair of highways.[36] The statutes should be liberally[37] and reasonably[38] construed to carry out the legislative intent, and the general purpose of the acts should be kept in mind,[39] but the statutes must be interpreted as written, and the courts cannot depart from the explicit declaration of the legislature.[40] A statute will be construed as mandatory[41] or directory,[42] as required by the evident intent of the legislature. Statutes fixing the time for an act to be done by public officers are often construed as directory where a disregard of such time cannot injuriously affect the rights of interested parties.[43]

All the statutory provisions pertaining to the same subject matter should be considered and construed together as a whole if possible.[44] A repeal

Rule of ejusdem generis

A statute, requiring appropriation of portion of road funds from three-mill road tax, gasoline tax, per capita tax, automobile tax "or any other tax," in hands of county court, was held to refer only to taxes of similar character to those enumerated, and not to general revenues, under the rule of ejusdem generis.—Mover v. Altheimer, 270 S.W. 91, 168 Ark. 271.

Assumption as to matters considered by legislature

In determining meaning of statute relating to distribution of gross receipts tax among counties and application thereof, court must assume that legislature was familiar with financial conditions of counties, that legislature regarded constitutional provisions and statutes relating to counties' finances as in pari materia, and that legislature was familiar with construction of such constitutional provisions and statutes by court of appeals.—Fiscal Court of Scott County v. Davidson, 82 S.W.2d 801, 259 Ky. 498.

Purpose of particular statutes

(1) One of the purposes of the road and bridges law is to provide a fund to be levied by the commissioners of highways for ordinary road purposes, and another purpose is to provide means by special taxation or the issuance of bonds, to be authorized by a vote of the people, to raise funds to improve roads which may be hard-surfaced or otherwise.—People ex rel. Singer v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 26 N.E.2d 840, 373 Ill. 523.

(2) The primary purpose of the act creating the state highway department and dealing with the state highway system was to establish and construct a uniform state highway system.—Reilly v. Sugar Creek Tp. of Harrison County, 139 S.W.2d 525, 345 Mo. 1248.

Contradictory provision defeating purpose of act

A provision in a refunding act which is contradictory to other provisions of the act and which would defeat the plan and purpose of the act will be disregarded as surplusage.—Cherry v. Leonard, 75 S.W.2d 401, 189 Ark. 869.

Statute dealing with distribution and application of funds

(1) The statute dealing with apportionment and distribution of the highway fund must be construed in its entirety with a view of giving effect to legislative intent.—Emporia Tp. of Lyon County v. Williams, 89 P.2d 919, 149 Kan. 860.

(2) In determining meaning of statute relating to gross receipts tax, distribution thereof among counties and application of proceeds, constitutional provisions and other statutes relating to counties' finances and taxes must be considered in pari by implication of one statute by another is not favored[45] and will be held not to exist if by any reasonable construction an irreconcilable conflict can be avoided.[46] As a general rule a subsequently enacted statute will be held to repeal a former statute in irreconcilable conflict therewith,[47] and where the legislature enacts two separate acts at the same session the last act will be held to prevail.[48] Although usually a specific statute will prevail over a general statute,[49] particularly where it is the later of the two acts,[50] a subsequently enacted general act will repeal or supplant a specific statute if it expressly so provides,[51] or if from the whole scheme and purpose of the general law an implied repeal is clearly intended by the legislature,[52] such as where an act is intended to cover the entire sub-

a. In General

Disbursements for highway purposes must be made out of the fund designated or authorized therefor by statute Funds appropriated for certain highway construction may by supplemental appropriation be transferred for other highway construction

Disbursements for general highway purposes or for particular highway projects or charges must be made out of the fund designated or authorized by statute.[56] A general fund for governmental expenses has been held not available for highway purposes,[57] but in other jurisdictions it has been held that the construction and maintenance of roads as an undisputed function of government may in certain instances be paid for out of the general fund.[58] A provision that the state highway fund shall be subject to appropriation for the improvement of a system of state highways removes such fund beyond all doubt from the general revenue fund and devotes, but does not appropriate, it to the purpose stated.[59]

The validity and propriety of the use for highway purposes generally of gasoline tax funds is considered in the C J S title Licenses §§ 30, 56, also 37 C J p 224 note 68 [a], 42 C J p 738 notes 55, 58 The use of vehicle tax funds generally is considered in the C J S title Licenses §§ 30, 56, also 37 C J p 229 note 12, and the use of motor vehicle tax funds in the C J S title Motor Vehicles §§ 136, 143, 144, also 42 C J p 729 notes 14–16, p 735 notes 21, 26–p 736 note 33, p 737 notes 36, 37 The general disposition of proceeds of highway taxes and of local assessments is discussed infra §§ 292 and 305, respectively

Anticipatory or estimated revenue A claim may be paid out of current revenues anticipated and appropriated for highway purposes,[60] and, where a tax has been assessed and is in process of collection, orders may be drawn on such fund.[61] When so provided by statute the use of anticipatory receipts from sources other than ad valorem taxes must not exceed the actual collection from such sources for the immediately preceding fiscal year.[62] After expenditure of the total sum authorized by statute for highway purposes, the county authorities cannot make further expenditures in anticipation of the ensuing annual levy.[63]

The state highway commission should conduct the business of the department on the basis of the revenue provided and which it is reasonably certain will be received.[64] In accordance with statutory provisions, the budget of the state highway commission is based on estimates of income furnished by the state tax commission at the beginning of the fiscal year,[65] and if the original estimate is revised by the state tax commission, the auditor of public accounts should give effect to the revision on his budget ledger.[66] At the close of the fiscal year the difference between the estimated receipts of the state highway commission and the actual receipts should be charged or credited on the auditor's budget ledger for the next fiscal year.[67]

Supplemental appropriations Funds appropriated for highway construction at certain designated places may, by supplemental appropriation, be transferred to highway construction at other places,[68] in the same manner as provided by statute for supplemental appropriations for current expense purposes.[69]

b. Grant of Funds by Federal Government

In accordance with statutory provisions, funds may be procured from the federal government for highway purposes but the state highway authorities, unless specifically required by statute, have no duty to procure federal aid

The primary objective of state statutes providing means whereby the state may procure an advance of money from the federal government has been held to be to make the funds offered by the federal government available and to authorize the state highway department to enter into specific contracts with the federal government to obtain such funds.[70] In the absence of a statutory requirement the state highway department does not have the duty to secure federal aid for any highway but only to use it when available,[71] but when specifically required by statute the state highway commission has the duty to comply with all rules and conditions of the federal government to obtain payment of funds allotted to the state by the federal government.[72] The engagement of a state to meet federal aid does not exempt the state, in dealing with the federal government, from the direction of its constitution and the operation of its statutes.[73]

Under statutes so providing, counties or districts may avail themselves of federal aid in the construction or maintenance of roads.[74] A statute which pertains to counties of a certain population but provides no means by which the population is to be ascertained will be construed as pertaining to the last federal census in order to render the statute definite and certain.[75]

c. Allocation or Grant of Funds by State

State funds are to be allocated or apportioned to counties or other political subdivisions of the state for construction and improvement of highways in accordance with constitutional or statutory provisions authorizing such disbursement

In furtherance of a purpose to establish a uniform state highway system[76] and to construct, improve, or maintain county highways,[77] constitutional or statutory provisions have been adopted permitting state funds to be allocated or apportioned to counties, districts or other political subdivisions. In accordance with the particular terms of such provisions, state funds or funds received from the state may be disbursed for future construction and improvement,[78] or for past construction and im-

N C—Oliver v Board of Com'rs of Johnston County, 139 S E 767, 194 N C 380

Time computed from original statute

The statute of 1923 if construable as transferring future burden of taxation for financing future construction maintenance, and repair of highways to motorists has been held to effect transfer of such burden in 1923, not in 1932 when act was amended, and allocation of gasoline tax and license funds to payment of cost of construction, maintenance, or repair incurred since original enactment would conform to legislative in-provement,[79] or the state may assume the debts or claims against political subdivisions incurred from past construction or improvement of particular roads.[80] Where the legislature has assumed plenary ownership and control of county and district roads as state roads, it has the power to declare that money expended by the counties and districts in the construction of those roads is a proper state expense,[81] and the fact that such roads were constructed as a county or district purpose or expense does not affect its power.[82] A constitutional provision authorizing the legislature to enact a statute for the construction and maintenance of state highways confers the right to pay for a necessary link of roadway already constructed.[83]

The state authorities have the mandatory duty to comply with the constitutional or statutory provisions,[84] and the county or district has a right to the disbursement in accordance with such provisions,[85] regardless of indebtedness owed to the state under another statute.[86] On the other hand the liabilities tention—Bridges v. State ex rel. Vaughn, 190 N.E. 758, 208 Ind. 684.

Application for state aid

Under a statute which permits an application for state aid in the construction of intercounty highways without the presentation of any petition, county commissioners may apply for state aid for improving intercounty highway without petition of abutting property owners.—Matthews v. Huwe, 19 Ohio App. 113, error dismissed 147 N.E. 610, 109 Ohio St. 628.

Proposed warrants as debts

Warrants proposed to be issued by county dated January 1, 1942, for purpose of financing county's obligations under contract with the state for improvement of highways, the cost of which was to be shared by county, and to be financed by being made payable out of funds to be received by county as its share of proceeds of state gasoline tax, would not be "debts" within proviso in Code of 1940 limiting amount governing body of a county is authorized to expend from gasoline tax fund in payment of any debt that may have been incurred by county for the construction or maintenance of roads or bridges to one-third of the total amount of such fund.—Cochran v. Marshall County, 6 So.2d 489, 242 Ala. 314.

80. Retroactive application of statute

A statute relieving counties of liability for cost of state highway rights of way will be given a retroactive application if such is the clearly expressed legislative intention.—Baker v. Donegan, 52 S.W.2d 152, 164 Tenn. 625, affirming 47 S.W.2d 1095, 164 Tenn. 625.

Assumption of payment of certificates of indebtedness

A statute providing for the assumption and payment by the state highway commission of bonds of road improvement districts includes by implication the payment of certificates of indebtedness.—Arkansas State Highway Commission v. Kerby, 300 S.W. 377, 175 Ark. 652.

Claims paid by county

A statute imposing liability on the state for claims against the county does not contemplate reimbursement to the county for claims already paid by the county.—Jackson County v. Burris, 56 S.W.2d 739, 165 Tenn. 559.

Duty as affected by other obligations

The duty to comply with a mandatory constitutional requirement that the state pay over a certain amount to a city for maintenance of streets which are used as state highways is not affected by the state highway commission's secondary duty to pay out a certain sum for road construction, nor is it affected by the fact that other contracts could not be fulfilled in event of compliance.—State ex rel. City of New Orleans v. Louisiana Highway Commission, 156 So. 806, 180 La. 512.

Duty to bring each county to parity

Act providing for road construction to bring each county in state to parity" required all counties to be brought in same condition regarding aid in road building, "parity" meaning equality.—Arkansas State Highway Commission v. Otis & Co., 31 S.W.2d 427, 181 Ark. 242.

Duty to appraise

State highway commission taking over, as part of state highway system, bridge constructed by county was required to make an appraisal of county's proportionate value of bridge, even if commission did not have money on hand with which to reimburse the county.—State ex rel. Cowan v. State Highway Commission, Miss., 13 So.2d 614.

Interpretation of statutes to do justice to indebted counties or districts

Where legislature has taken over for state purposes roads constructed by counties and districts and has by statute declared a purpose to compensate counties and districts, statutes giving relief to counties from indebtedness assumed for road taken over by state should be interpreted to do justice to counties and districts which have assumed large indebtedness for road construction.—State ex rel. Hill v. Cone, 191 So. 50, 140 Fla. 1.

Money expended on county bridge

Where abandoned county bridge is moved and incorporated into state highway system at another point, the county is entitled to moneys expended thereon.—State ex rel. Reynolds County v. State Highway Commission, 42 S.W.2d 193, 328 Mo. 859.

of the state[87] or the rights of the political subdivisions[88] cannot exceed those created by the terms of the provisions, and the indebtedness or improvement for which a disbursement is sought must be qualified as within the classification designated therein.[89] Disbursement to the counties or districts can be made only from funds derived from the particular source designated by the constitutional or statutory provision authorizing the disbursement.[90]

Duty to reimburse as requiring assumption of indebtedness

(1) A statute providing for reimbursement to counties and districts for moneys expended in construction of certain roads does not impose on the state the duty to assume the bonded indebtedness of the counties and districts—Hillsborough County v Bregenzer, Fla., 10 So.2d 498—Holland v State ex rel Goss, Fla., 10 So.2d 338

(2) Thus the board of administration may not lawfully pay from state funds derived from gasoline taxes that part of a judgment against special road and bridge district which represented interest that accrued after maturity of the bonds, and such other costs as accrued incident to securing the judgment, including interest on the judgment from date it was secured to date of payment—Holland v State ex rel Goss, supra

Theory entitling county to refund

The county is not entitled to a refund on the theory of ownership, but it is so entitled on the theory of its voluntary aid in the construction of projects—State ex rel Reynolds County v State Highway Commission, 42 S.W.2d 193, 328 Mo 859

Credit for expenditure on county roads

Under a statute which permits the county to expend a certain percentage of the fund derived from the state on county or township roads rather than on state highways, the money must be actually expended on such roads and not merely set aside for such use in order that the county may claim credit for the expenditure in a settlement of accounts between the state and the county—State ex rel Bennett v State Highway Commission, 26 P.2d 606, 138 Kan. 294, rehearing denied 33 P.2d 330, 139 Kan. 655; State ex rel Smith v State Highway Commission, 295 P. 986, 132 Kan. 327

Surplus funds payable to county

(1) The statute relating to application by state board of administration of funds for payment of road indebtedness of counties, which provided that "surplus in county accounts," designated as "sinking fund account," should be remitted to county for construction and maintenance of roads therein did not contemplate existence of a surplus in the accounts until accomplishment of the state's plan to make restitution to counties for construction by counties of roads subsequently taken over by state and designated as state roads—State ex rel Proctor v Cone, 193 So. 753, 141 Fla. 606

(2) In the statute the words "surplus" and "sinking fund" were used in their ordinary meaning, and "surplus in county accounts" had reference in general to certain portion of the second gas tax and might not include any portion of the ad valorem taxes—State ex rel Proctor v Cone, supra

(3) The county could not have a surplus from gas tax funds so long as roads constructed by it and taken over by state as state roads were unpaid for or any bonds thereon were outstanding—State ex rel Proctor v Cone, supra

(4) If any outstanding bonds on roads constructed by county and taken over by state had not matured or could not be acquired and sinking fund ample to pay principal and interest thereon when and as due was provided for and invested in liquid securities approved by state board of administration or as directed by law, such bonds would be considered as having been taken care of and a "surplus" as contemplated by the statute could then accrue—State ex rel Proctor v Cone, supra

City streets

A statute authorizing reimbursement where "road" on highway system had been built under benefit district plan was held not to authorize reimbursement to cities for improving street designated as part of highway system—State ex rel Ice v. State Highway Commission, 17 P.2d 839, 136 Kan. 652

Bonds for roads and public buildings

A judgment on county bonds, which were designated "road and bridge funding bonds," but which recited that they were issued for construction, equipment, repair, and maintenance of public roads and bridges, and repair and maintenance of public buildings, was not a "judgment based upon an indebtedness created by the construction of county roads and bridges" within provision of the Kentucky Gross Receipts Tax Act for use of county road fund for payment of bonded or floating indebtedness for construction or maintenance of county roads and bridges—Charles A. Hinsch & Co. v Rowan County, C.C.A.Ky., 126 F.2d 189

Acquisition of right of way

Acquisition by county of right of way for new road was held not "improving" or "improvement" of road within constitutional provision authorizing reimbursement out of trunk highway fund—State v Babcock, 242 N.W. 474, 186 Minn. 132

Ordinary repairs

A constitutional provision permitting the state to reimburse counties out of trunk highway fund for "permanently improving" roads does not apply to ordinary repairs which are not permanent improvements—State v Babcock, supra

Temporary maintenance by state to be given to townships;[93] it is not to be paid to individual property owners.[94] A statute providing for donations for the improvement of roads has been held not to contemplate donating funds to a road district organized under an unconstitutional act and as a private venture,[95] but when expressly so provided by statute a road improvement district which has issued bonds and completed road improvements, although it has been organized under an invalid act, is entitled to share in funds from the state.[96]

Method and amount The amount and extent of state aid[97] and the method of distribution or apportionment,[98] are dependent on the terms of the constitutional or statutory provisions authorizing such aid. In accordance therewith a county or township which has furnished funds for a project subsequently becoming a part of the state highway system is not entitled to reimbursement in cash but is entitled to reimbursement in additional roads.[99] Particular statutory directions have been held not to be mandatory but to vest a certain discretion in the state highway commission,[1] but the directory feature of the statute should not be arbitrarily ignored.[2]

The state may, under statutory authorization, withhold a portion of the turnback funds due the county.[3]

d. Allocation or Distribution of Funds by County

A county must allocate or distribute its highway funds to cities, townships, districts, or precincts within the county in accordance with statutes so providing.

Under express provisions of some statutes a county must allocate or distribute its highway funds derived from the state or from other sources to cities, townships, districts, or precincts within the county,[4] or must allocate funds for use on streets or highways therein,[5] but its duties or liabilities do not exceed those imposed by the statute,[6] and the city,

Duty to pay township's debts

(1) A statute which gives to county commissioners authority to expend gasoline tax and automobile registration fees received from state to discharge townships' debts for repair and maintenance of highways outstanding when townships' jurisdiction of highways was transferred to commissioners under original act has been held not to require commissioners to pay such debts out of such funds—Board of Com'rs of Delaware County v Farmers State Bank of Eaton, 10 N E 2d 769, 104 Ind App 692

(2) The act providing that all expenses incurred in maintenance, repair, and preservation of county highways, including township high-

township, district, or precinct must comply with the conditions imposed by the statute in order to be entitled to a portion of the fund.[7] Where a county collects, retains, and expends road funds which are claimed by a city, the county acts as trustee for the city and does not acquire ownership of the fund free from the trust by mere lapse of time.[8]

Method and amount The county must comply with the statutes prescribing the amount and method of distribution or apportionment.[9] In accordance with statutory provisions the county authorities are vested with a broad discretion,[10] but they must not act arbitrarily or abuse this discretion[11] and ignore other directory features of the statute,[12] if they do so their action is subject to review by a court of competent jurisdiction,[13] although the court is without power to determine how the fund should be apportioned.[14] A practice by county authorities of dividing the county highway funds into parts exclusively for each district or precinct has been held to be improper.[15] Where the county, at the request of a city, proceeds under one statute as to apportionment the city is not entitled to have funds apportioned under another statute,[16] particularly where the city by reason of its delay in asserting its right to a larger fund is guilty of laches.[17] Under a statute which requires the funds to be apportioned and paid over to townships, the county must make payment to a township and it has no authority to expend on its own account a township's portion for roads in the township.[18]

e. Agreements as to Contributions or Expenditures

Agreements as to contributions and expenditures of road funds have been held to be valid, and enforceable according to their terms

Agreements between the state and the county as to contributions and expenditures of road funds have been held to be valid,[19] and enforceable ac-

ways transferred to counties, shall be paid out of funds derived from gasoline tax and automobile license fees paid to counties by state, was intended to limit such expenses to amount of funds received by counties, and it was not intended that debts incurred before passage of act should be paid out of such funds—Board of Com'rs of Delaware County v Farmers State Bank of Eaton, supra

Consideration for contract

There is valuable consideration, supporting agreement of county commissioners to advance county money to the highway commission to construct part of the highway system in the county, in the commission's agreement to repay the county, without interest, out of the funds allocated to the county from the proceeds of bond issues thereafter to be authorized by the legislature, "or out of other road construction funds," to the extent that such funds may be sufficient therefor there being other road construction funds available annually under existing law from which some payments on the loan could be made—Young v Board of Com'rs of Johnston County, 128 S E 401, 190 N C 52

Agreement changing use of funds

A supplemental agreement that money allocated to county for repayment of the county's loan to the state highway commission should be used in construction of certain roads, instead of applied toward retirement of bonds sold to obtain money loaned by county was held not invalid—Oliver v Board of Com'rs of Johnston County, 139 S E 767, 194 N.C. 380.

cording to their terms [20] When a highway project, to be completed by joint use of county funds and funds of the state highway commission, is rightfully abandoned before any work has been performed, the county's funds held by the state for this purpose must be returned,[21] and if abandoned after partial completion the ratable portion of the county's funds must be returned [22]

Where costs of a certain highway are to be apportioned between the county and a city, a donation to the fund for the project is to be deducted before the cost is apportioned, when this is expressly provided for by statute,[23] but in the absence of such a statute it has been held that where a village agrees with the county to pay a certain percentage of the cost of a certain road it is not entitled to a refund by the fact that the county receives state or federal aid to finance its share of the cost.[24]

A contract between the fiscal court of a county and contributors to a fund for the construction of a highway will be enforced in accordance with its terms [25]

f. Custody, Control, and Ownership of Funds

Highway funds are to be placed and kept in the proper account within the custody, supervision, and control of the duly authorized and designated officer or agency. Funds credited by the state to a county may or may not be county funds prior to actual payment, dependent on the provisions of the particular statute.

Highway funds are to be placed and kept within the custody, supervision, and control of the duly authorized and designated officer or agency[26] subject, within constitutional limitations,[27] to the continuing power and control of the legislature [28] Ac-

24. Minn—Village of Sanborn in Redwood County v Redwood County, 208 N W 9, 166 Minn 354

25. Contract as affecting appropriations

A contract between the fiscal court and the contributors to a fund for the construction of a highway, which set out an order of the fiscal court appropriating the twenty-cent annual tax each year for the construction of the road until its completion, but which imposed on the contributors the obligation to pay their contributions if the road was constructed in accordance with the order of the court, shows that the prime purpose was the construction of the road, and not the method by which it should be paid for, so that the contract does not prevent the fiscal court, after the issuance of bonds for road construction, from applying enough of the proceeds of the sale of the bonds to complete the road affected by the contract, thereby releasing the annual twenty-cent levy for the payment of the bonds, as required by the constitution—Smith v Livingston County, 242 S W 612, 195 Ky 382

Supervision of expenditures and depository of funds

Under a statute so providing, the state highway department has supervision over expenditures of state highway funds, state treasurer being merely depository of funds—Texas Co v Schriewer, Tex Civ App, 38 S W 2d 111, modified on other grounds Smith v Texas Co, 53 S W 2d 774, followed in Smith v G B Johnson Hardware Co, 53 S W 2d 779 and Smith v Jacksboro Stone Products Co, 53 S W 2d 780, affirming, Civ App, 41 S W 2d 347

Expenditure by state under supervision of county department

Where the statute provides that taxes turned over by the county to the state highway department are to be used on county highways and bridges as the county highway department may direct a resolution of quarterly county court directing that taxes belonging to county be turned over to state department of highways and public works to be expended by them for period of twelve months, with no restriction as to use of fund, was void—Robbins v Phillips, 136 S W 2d 507, 175 Tenn 568

Assumption of liability for payment

Where a statute vests all local authority over the roads of a county in the county highway commission, and requires the board of county commissioners to place all funds available for such purpose to the credit of the commission, the latter, and not the board, should assume the balance due to the state highway commission for work done by a state contractor on a part of a state highway in the county control of which was vested in the state highway commission—Board of Com'rs of Mecklenburg County v Mecklenburg Highway Commission, 109 S E 848, 182 N C 617

28. Iowa—State v Executive Council of State of Iowa, 223 N W 737, 207 Iowa 923

The state highway commission cannot expend any funds except those alloted to it by legislative direction—State Highway Commission v Gulley, 145 So 351, 167 Miss 631

Funds held by county as trustee for city

(1) Proceeds of county road levy held by county as trustee for city are at all times subject to paramount right of legislature to dictate how such tax funds should be used or allocated—City of Fremont v Dodge County, 266 N W 771, 130 Neb 856

(2) Thus a county which collected county road tax levies for long period of time was held not liable to municipalities for such taxes under statute authorizing counties under township organization to retain all moneys theretofore collected as county road levy and which had not theretofore been paid to township or municipality in county—City of Fremont v Dodge County, supra

(3) The county is not liable not-

cordingly supervision and control of the expenditures may be exercised by a particular court,[29] and an order of another court which improperly interferes with this supervision and control is invalid.[30] The appropriation of money for highway purposes does not constitute the fund a trust fund for the benefit of the contractor.[31] The manner and procedure by which securities in which surplus highway funds were invested should be converted into cash on the maturity of road bonds rest, unless otherwise provided by statute, in the discretion of the statutory trustee.[32]

The highway commissioners cannot tie up the taxpayers' money an unreasonable length of time.[33]

Placement or retention in separate accounts. In accordance with statutory provisions, separate and distinct highway funds derived from particular sources or to be used for particular purposes are to be kept in separate accounts,[34] and all money subsequently received is to be placed with the fund of which it properly is a part.[35] A surplus of highway funds for one purpose is not to be transferred to an account for another purpose in the absence of statutory authorization therefor.[36]

Revenue from motor vehicle fees, operator's license fees, and motor fuel taxes which is required by statute to be paid into the general fund rather than into a separate account does not, in the absence of further statutory or constitutional direction, constitute a trust fund to be used exclusively for highway purposes.[37]

Funds apportioned or contributed by state. In accordance with the terms of the particular statutory or constitutional provisions, funds in the state treasury credited to the county highway fund have been held to be state funds[38] to which the county withstanding statutes were passed subsequent to date when city obtained judgment against county—City of Beatrice v Gage County, 266 N W 777, 130 Neb 850

Expenditure without order of appropriation by court

An order of the fiscal court providing that the funds derived from the levy of a road tax in each magisterial district should be returned to that district is not an appropriation of such funds for the construction or improvement of the roads or bridges or other public property of the county, so as to sustain an expenditure of such funds for road purposes by the magistrate of that district—McKechnie v Canada, 250 S W 111, 198 Ky 807

Interest from bond proceeds

Interest derived from banks on deposit of funds from the sale of bonds issued for highway improvements is a part of the earnings of unexpended road construction funds, and is to be credited to that account, and not to the bond issue interest account—People v Millard, supra.

Tax collector's commissions has no vested property right,[39] at least until paid to the state treasurer as ex officio county treasurer.[40] Under other statutes a fund apportioned to a county is the property of the county to which the apportionment is made although not actually paid over to it.[41] A county's or district's share of the state gasoline tax when prorated and paid to a county or district officer or trustee becomes county or district funds.[42]

Funds paid or payable by county to state. Proceeds of taxes which are collected by a county as an agent for the state for the construction of state roads[43] and contributions or appropriations by a county to a state aid fund for improvement of highways in the county[44] are not strictly county funds but become state funds dedicated to the specific purpose.

Public funds raised, acquired, or appropriated for general or specific highway purposes cannot be legally expended or disbursed for another purpose,[47] and they must be used in the manner provided by

39. Practice of prescribing allotment on percentage basis

The practice of the highway department of prescribing percentage allotment of total construction funds to each county on percentage basis was a mere administrative practice for more convenient and equitable handling or budgeting of construction funds and did not have effect of vesting in the county an inviolable property right to any of the funds, nor could recognition of the practice by statute have that effect, since statute at most merely regulates conduct of the department and does not create any contractual right.—Chesterfield County v. State Highway Department of South Carolina, 3 S.E.2d 686, 191 S.C. 19.

Charges or costs payable from particular fund

(1) Claim against county for labor chargeable against the county highway fund should have been denied where claimant failed to establish an unencumbered balance in the specific items appropriated with the constitution[48] or statutes,[49] or designated by the voters.[50] This rule has been applied to highway funds derived from various sources, including general or special property taxes,[51] gasoline or motor vehicle license taxes,[52] proceeds of bond issues,[53] or funds allocated by the state to political subdivisions.[54] In accordance with constitutional and statutory provisions the highway commissioner or other designated officer or agency may be vested with a discretionary power as to the matter of expenditures within the general scope of the purpose for which the funds are to be appropriated,[55] and which to pay the claim—Board of Pontotoc County Com'rs v. Witherspoon, 116 P.2d 719, 189 Okl. 277—Board of Com'rs of Pontotoc County v. Campbell, 115 P.2d 256, 189 Okl. 20.

Otto, 266 Ill.App. 234.

(3) In counties where the highway commissioner is "road district officer" not "county officer," he must necessarily be paid from road and bridge fund.—People ex rel. Dennison v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 189 N.E. 285, 355 Ill. 124.

(5) Where a statute imposes the duty on a special road district board to keep roads under its charge in as good repair as the means at its command will permit, repair services should be paid for out of the funds of the district available for such purpose.—Bixler v. (a) In general
(b) Particular roads or classes of roads
(c) Bonds and warrants
(d) Administrative and engineering salaries and expenses, attorney's fees
(e) Damages, compensation insurance
(f) Invalid or unapproved claim

(a) In General

A highway fund may be used for the general purpose for which it exists, including everything appropriately connected with, and necessarily incidental to, the complete accomplishment of the purpose. A surplus at the end of one fiscal year is available for the same purposes in the succeeding year, and a deficit in one year may be taken care of in the succeeding year unless the disbursing agency of the previous year had no authority to create the deficit

A highway fund may be used for the general purpose for which it exists,[58] including everything appropriately connected with, and necessarily incidental to, the complete accomplishment of the purpose.[59] Within this rule an expenditure for road machinery,[60] for the construction of a bridge on the road to be improved,[61] and for the ordinary and usual devices used to promote the safety and convenience of traffic[62] have been held proper. In accordance with the terms by which the particular fund has been acquired or its expenditure authorized, it may be used for both construction and maintenance,[63] or it may be limited to construction only[64] or to maintenance only.[65] Ordinarily a fund for construction and maintenance may be used to acquire rights of way for highways,[66] but it cannot

Assumption in favor of propriety of disbursement

Where county commissioners, in the exercise of their discretion, allocated gasoline tax and automobile license funds for payment of road bonds, motorist could not complain, since it must be presumed, in absence of contrary showing, that county commissioners would properly maintain highways and that, if gasoline and license funds received in future by county were insufficient for such maintenance, property tax would be levied - Bridges v State ex rel Vaughn, 190 N E 758, 208 Ind 681

be so used if the statutes provide that the cost of acquiring rights of way is payable out of the general fund.[67] Particular statutory provisions have been held to authorize a temporary withdrawal from the highway fund of a sum necessary to pay bills for lighting the highways, subject to reimbursement from the special levy for lighting,[68] or to authorize the use of a road district's funds to improve a city's streets.[69] Where commissioners have power to make an immaterial change in road improvement plans after approval by the county court, they have the power to pay for the added cost out of the highway funds.[70]

A highway fund cannot be used to defray the general costs or the current expenses of government,[71] or to pay private debts of a highway contractor.[72]

Use of surplus highway fund. An unexpended balance in a highway fund at the end of one fiscal year is available for the same highway purposes in the succeeding year.[73] It cannot be used in a district other than that for which it was acquired,[74] nor can it be used for general governmental expenses,[75] unless the necessity for a fund for highway construction and maintenance no longer exists.[76] A balance remaining after the primary purpose of a fund has been fulfilled may be expended for its secondary purpose.[77]

Payment of deficit from preceding year. A deficit in one year may be taken care of in the succeeding year,[78] but not if the disbursing agency of the previous year had no authority to create the deficit.[79]

(b) Particular Roads or Classes of Roads

As a general rule funds raised or acquired for the improvement of a particular road or class of roads cannot be used for other roads. Under particular constitutional or statutory provisions a county may expend or lend its funds for state roads or roads constructed or maintained through state aid.

As a general rule funds raised or acquired for the improvement of a particular highway may be used therefor although unsubstantial changes are made in its course,[80] but they cannot be used for the construction or improvement of an entirely different highway,[81] or for the designated highway after it has been so materially changed as to constitute a new road,[82] even though the funds are insufficient for the original purpose[83] or the construction or improvement of another road is more feasible or practical.[84] An exception to the general rule has been noted to the effect that, where bonds are issued under legislative authority without a popular vote and no contractual rights have arisen, the proceeds may be appropriated to a road other than the one originally planned and for which the bonds could have been issued in the first instance.[85] In accordance with the general rule, funds acquired for the improvement of state or primary roads cannot be used for the improvement of a road not within that classification,[86] and where bonds have been voted for primary or state roads as designated and located the proceeds cannot be expended on roads subsequently designated as primary or state roads.[87] Where a bond issue is passed for construction of state highway projects, the proceeds cannot be devoted to construction of highways no longer a part of the state highway system although they were a part of the system at the time the bond issue was voted on.[88] A statute authorizing an expenditure of funds for state highways is not necessarily limited to highways so classified at the time of the enactment of the statute.[89] Where bonds are issued for the general purpose of constructing improved public roads, the proceeds may be applied to the construction of any road in the district which can be classed as an improved public road.[90]

Paved or hard-surfaced roads The proceeds of bonds issued for the purpose of constructing paved or hard-surfaced roads must be used for the construction of roads answering that description.[91]

Part of road Where bonds are voted to build a described road, the whole of the proceeds cannot be used in building a part only of such road,[92] even though the state highway commission has agreed to construct the rest of the road at some indefinite time in the future.[93]

Use of county bond proceeds

(1) County could use proceeds of county bonds previously issued to establish, construct, and maintain county roads for grading state-aid road under contract with highway board, pending board's payment of part of costs as agreed by it.—Spain v. Hall County, 165 S.E. 612, 175 Ga. 600.

(2) Where, pursuant to a contract between the county and the state highway commission, the latter commenced construction of a road it is entitled to the proceeds of a county bond issue voted for such construction.—Estill County v. Price, 153 S.W. 2d 924, 287 Ky. 484.

Use of share of gasoline tax

(1) County may pay for rights of way for construction of roads to be taken into the state highway system.—McKean v. Carroll County, 154 N.E. 896, 324 Ill. 243.

(2) Expenditures made by county for right of way after highway was taken over by state were held not unauthorized as expenditure of county funds for state highway, where expenditures were made pursuant to agreement whereby county was to secure and pay for right of way to widen county road in return for state's taking it over.—State ex rel.

county funds for that purpose.[97] The power of the legislature to confer on a county the power to build public roads includes the power to give it the right to contribute to, or aid in the construction of, a public road in the county to be owned and maintained by the state.[98] However, it has been held that, where state highways and county roads are in distinct and separate classifications, funds received by the county from taxes or other sources for county roads or other specific purposes cannot be used or advanced to the state for the construction and maintenance of state highways without violating a constitutional provision prohibiting the diversion of such funds,[99] but county highway funds may be used for county roads which have been designated as part of the state highway system.[1]

Payment by township of expenses incurred by state In accordance with statutory authorization, a township may pay for land condemned by the state highway department for the purpose of building a supplementary state highway.[2] Under a statutory power to direct the raising of money by taxation for the construction and repair of roads within the township and to make contracts necessary to the exercise of such power, a township may appropriate money to defray a portion of the expense incurred by the state in improving a road within the township.[3]

(c) Bonds and Warrants

Use of funds allocated to county

(1) County commissioners were held authorized to allocate, for payment of county unit and township road bonds, surplus funds from special road fund consisting of gasoline tax and automobile license fees collected by state and apportioned to county for the construction, maintenance and repair of highways.—Bridges v. State ex rel. Vaughn, 190 N.E. 758, 208 Ind. 684.

(2) Under the Acts 1929 (Ex. Sess.) c. 14486, § 14, as amended by Acts 1933, c. 15891, moneys credited to county from gasoline taxes, but never specifically appropriated by commissioners to replace county or district tax levy for payment of road bonds, or otherwise allocated by state board of administration cannot be withheld by latter for payment of such bonds after commissioners have otherwise directed, but should be disbursed by board for purchase of bonds.—State ex rel. De Soto County v. Sholtz, 157 So. 645, 117 Fla. 258.

(3) Where the terms of the statute, authorizing state board of administration to use gasoline tax funds credited to county for purchase of county or district road bonds are not seasonably invoked by county commissioners, board must apply funds to payment of interest on and principal of bonds, regardless of instructions from county.—State ex rel. De Soto County v. Sholtz, supra.

(4) Where gasoline taxes have been duly budgeted and appropriated to interest or sinking fund requirements for outstanding bonds of road and bridge district state board of administration was held not authorized to use proceeds of such gasoline taxes for purchase of bonds of road and bridge district so as to reduce outstanding indebtedness.—State ex rel. Florida Nat. Bank v. State Board of Administration, 156 So. 15, 115 Fla. 753.

(5) County commissioners' resolution adopting statute authorizing use of gasoline tax revenues to purchase bonds of county and districts thereof was held sufficient to permit county to operate under statute, notwithstanding subsequent estimate of revenues on which budget was based inadvertently included gasoline tax revenues where commissioners thereafter adopted resolution amending record of budget to show nunc pro tunc that gasoline tax revenues were appropriated for purchase of bonds.—State ex rel. bonds cannot be used for refunding bond expenses [6] Only funds specified by statute are to be used for payment of particular bonds [7] Administrative officials who have collected only part of the money necessary for payment cannot, in the absence of express statutory authorization, reserve the money for any particular portion of the road bond indebtedness,[8] and they cannot legally apply funds to the payment of refunding bonds to the exclusion or prejudice of payments on original bonds of the same nature [9] The proceeds of bonds issued for the improvement of a particular road may be authorized by the voters to be used to repurchase the bonds when improvement of that road is no longer feasible [10]

Where the statute requires that, if the fund on hand is insufficient to meet all outstanding warrants, the warrants are redeemable pursuant to number and date, the creation of a special road fund to pay subsequent warrants, thus repudiating outstanding warrants, is unauthorized and void [11] Interest on warrants is not recoverable from a highway fund which by statute is liable only for the principal [12]

(d) Administrative and Engineering Salaries and Expenses; Attorney's Fees

Administrative salaries and expenses, consulting engineers' salaries, and attorney's fees have been held properly payable from highway funds.

Administrative salaries and expenses are properly payable from a fund for the construction and maintenance of roads.[13] A fund especially allocated for administration and engineering purposes may be expended for housing facilities for the state highway commission [14]

Where the majority of the state highway committee lacks confidence in the ability of the state engineer, the salary of a consulting engineer is properly payable from a highway fund appropriated for emergencies.[15]

Attorney's fees Attorney's fees for legal services rendered in connection with the construction and maintenance of highways are properly payable from the highway fund, as within the general purpose of the fund [16]

(c) Damages; Compensation Insurance

Damages for personal injuries cannot be paid from funds solely for the maintenance and construction of highways, but may be paid from highway funds not specifically allocated for a particular purpose where a statute authorizes payment A state highway commission cannot, without statutory authorization, expend its funds for the payment of premiums on a policy of workmen's compensation insurance

Funds solely for the maintenance and construction of highways cannot be used to pay a judgment for personal injuries,[17] nor can they be used to satisfy a claim for unliquidated damages claimed by a contractor[18] Damages for personal injuries may be paid from highway funds not specifically allocated for a particular purpose where a statute authorizes payment by the highway commission but specifies no particular fund[19]

Compensation insurance In the absence of statutory authorization a state highway commission cannot expend its funds for the payment of premiums on a policy of workmen's compensation insurance covering employees of the commission[20]

(f) Invalid or Unapproved Claim

An invalid claim or a claim which is not substantiated or approved as required by statute is properly refused payment

An invalid claim[21] or a claim which is not substantiated[22] or approved as required by statute[23] is properly refused payment A claim to be payable need not be approved by any particular officer if such approval is not required by statute.[24]

Money derived from the sale of bonds may be used to pay for roads constructed by the district notwithstanding the district's contract for the construction of the road was illegal, since the district has received the benefits of the contract.[25]

i. Remedies

The court may enjoin the illegal and unauthorized use or expenditure of the highway funds

The court may enjoin the illegal and unauthorized use or expenditure of the highway funds[26] but it cannot restrain the use of funds for authorized purposes[27] Petitioners who seek to enjoin the expenditure of proceeds of a bond issue on any road other than that for which the bonds were voted are not entitled to a decree giving relief on any matter other than that specifically requested,[28] and a decree enjoining the expenditure of the fund on any other road does not enjoin the expenditure for other purposes than road projects,[29] nor does it prevent the taxpayers from voting to use the fund to repurchase the bonds[30]

By looking to the state board of administration for relief and seeking to participate in the funds administered by it, bondholders and other creditors are, to the extent they seek participation in the fund handled by the board, deemed to have accepted the terms and conditions of the statute under which the board was created and functions[31]

§ 177. Authority and Duty to Construct or Repair

a. In general
b State highways and highway systems
c County or township highways
d Agreements between governmental authorities
e Necessity and time for work, statutory preliminaries

a. In General

The construction and repair of public roads is a governmental function which may be exercised by the state or delegated to state or local agencies or bodies, and under some circumstances duties may rest on a private individual or corporation with respect to the maintenance of a highway

The construction, maintenance, and repair of public highways is a governmental function,[32] which belongs primarily to, and may be exercised by, the state and the state legislature.[33] The power of the state to exercise this function is inherent,[34] plenary,[35] and part of its police powers,[36] but the power of local authorities to provide for the improvement of roads is statutory,[37] and proceedings by such authorities looking to the completion of a road improvement are null and void where taken after the repeal of the statute enabling them to act.[38]

To accomplish the governmental purpose of laying out, constructing, and maintaining highways the legislature may abolish an old system and adopt and institute a new one,[39] and, as shown infra subdivision b of this section, in many jurisdictions provision has been made for a system of state or state-aid highways to take the place of some other mode of maintaining highways. Under some statutes there exist a state highway system and a county highway system and the two systems are separate and distinct, controlled and operated under different jurisdictions.[40]

Subject to constitutional restrictions,[41] the work of constructing or maintaining highways may be

Constitutional provision held not to destroy legislative control

A constitutional provision relating to authority of counties or political subdivisions to issue bonds or lend their credit and to levy taxes for construction and maintenance of roads, has been held not to divest legislature of control over public roads and highways and expenditure of road funds by counties or other agencies of government, but only to provide a method and means by which roads may be constructed under legislative provisions—Robbins v Limestone County, 268 S W 915, 114 Tex 345, answers to certified questions conformed to, Civ App, 272 S W 526

be delegated to them.[63] Power to construct a highway ordinarily includes power to obtain rights of way,[64] and some statutory provisions have been construed to show a legislative intent that local subdivisions of the state, such as counties and townships, should aid in constructing highways by furnishing and paying for the rights of way.[65]

Culverts Construction of culverts may be directed by the proper officials,[66] and, so far as concerns their maintenance, culverts are part of the road on which they are located and are governed by the law applicable to roads.[67]

Federal power; effect of federal statutes The establishment and maintenance of highways over privately owned lands belongs primarily to the state authorities and not to the federal government,[68] and the federal statutes relative to federal aid in the construction and maintenance of state roads have no effect on the power of state agencies to establish roads,[69] but only come into play in connection with the contributions to be made by the federal government in money to aid in the construction and maintenance of the roads when and if they have been established.[70]

Grading, change of grade The duty to keep a road in good and sufficient repair as imposed by statute does not require a radical change of level in the road to prevent inundation constituting in effect the making of a new road.[71] Under a statutory power to grade the hills on a highway, the authorities may not only require the hills to be cut down but require the earth taken from the cut to be filled in the highways between the hills.[72] Technically "grading" is the reduction of the earth's surface to a given line fixed as the grade and may include filling or excavating, or both, as may be necessary to accomplish that object.[73] In its common usage "to grade a road" means simply to change its level.[74] Under statutes imposing liability on the highway authorities to abutters damaged by a change of grade, the term "grade" signifies something more than the mere preparation of the highway for travel which may often be accompanied by slight, superficial changes,[75] but it does include any elevation or depression of the surface of the highway as it in fact exists and which has never been brought to a uniform grade resulting from such an attempt to establish such a grade.[76]

Duty or authority of private individuals or corporations. The burden of keeping and improving highways cannot be placed on the owners of abutting lands, whether inclosed or not, merely because of their frontage.[77] Circumstances may exist however, under which duties may rest on a private individual or corporation with respect to the maintenance of a highway,[78] as where he obstructs it,[79] or where the way is built for his convenience;[80] and the governmental authorities may obtain a recovery against one who has damaged a road[81] or who has failed to do his duty as to road work [82] The fact that an individual is under a duty to repair does not exonerate the municipality,[83] unless the sole duty is imposed on the individual by express statutory provision [84] The municipality may delegate to individuals authority to improve a road,[85] and may reimburse individuals for work done for the public benefit,[86] except, it has been held, where the work was done without contract or authority,[87] but in the absence of a clearly expressed legislative intent, a statute should not be so construed as to commit the function of maintaining a part of the public highways to a private company [88]

Duties as to the construction and maintenance of highways may be removed from the local authorities and imposed on state highway authorities pursuant to provisions establishing a state highway system and providing for the incorporation therein of local highways

In many jurisdictions provision has been made for a state highway system under which the construction and maintenance of state or state-aid highways is undertaken by the state or an appropriate branch of its administrative machinery, and, pursuant to such provision, roads may be added to the system and the state authorities may take over roads previously under the supervision of, or constructed by, counties and other political subdivisions [89] The purposes of such provisions have been variously stated to be to establish a uniform system of highways[90] as to width and the like,[91] to insure continuous roads from one county to another,[92] to relieve the county or county taxpayers of the cost of the construction and maintenance of the roads,[93] to have the county relinquish to the state its control over the roads,[94] and to fix, as a matter of record, responsibility for the supervision and maintenance of such roads [95] The conclusion of the state legislature as to whether a certain road should be made a state highway or a part of the state highway system cannot be successfully challenged,[96] as, for example, by a county [97] The legislature may limit the total mileage to be constructed and maintained as state-aid roads,[98] but a statute limiting the amount of high-type pavement which can be constructed by the state highway department has been held to apply only to state highways designated by the state highway commission after it took charge of the state highways,[99] and not to benefit district highways[1] The terms of the governing statutes determine the roads which constitute, or which may be designated as parts of, the state highway system,[2] and the acts which constitute the adoption of a road as part of the state system[3] Under some statutory provisions the adoption of a road as part of the state highway system must be shown by the records of the highway commission[4] Where the statute sets no time limit as to the assumption of control by the state highway commission of roads constituting part of the state highway system, the matter rests in the sound judgment and discretion of the commission[5] It has been held, under some statutes, that when a county road has been taken over by the state it no longer remains a county highway,[6] although it may revert to its character as a county highway upon its abandonment by the state,[7] but under other statutory provisions it has been held that a road taken over by the state highway department, and thereby becoming a state-aid road, does not cease to be a county road, but remains a public road of the county and a part of the system of roads of the county in which it is situated[8]

In jurisdictions in which a state highway system has been established, the duty or authority to designate, construct, or maintain state highways is generally imposed or conferred on a particular state agency, such as a state highway commission or department[9] Under some provisions the jurisdiction

Necessity of accepting all portions of roads

A statute providing for the assumption by the state highway commission of control and maintenance of such hard-surfaced public highways as had previously been constructed by parishes has been held not to require the commission to accept all portions of such roads constructed by parishes or other subdivisions, or by the former highway department, but to empower the commission to change the road or route or select others—Claiborne v Louisiana Highway Commission, 98 So. 172 154 La 743

In Pennsylvania matters pertaining to the state highway system, its construction and maintenance are under authority of department of highways, subject to limitation that where any highway, state, county, or township, is crossed by facilities of a public utility, then matters pertaining to the crossing are subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the public utility commission—Department of Highways of Pennsylvania of the state highway commission or department is confined to the construction and maintenance of state highways only,[10] although as to such highways its jurisdiction is exclusive.[11] The state highway commission has such powers as are specifically conferred on it and also all powers necessary or proper to enable it to carry out fully the construction and maintenance of the state highway system,[12] and a county cannot control the acts of the commission done in compliance with its statutory mandate.[13] Under some statutory provisions the state highway department can build state-aid roads alone or in conjunction with county commissioners.[14] A state highway commission, in constructing state-aid highways, has been held to act on behalf of the state and not as joint agent of towns and the state.[15]

Local authorities ordinarily are without authority, or at least have only a limited authority, with respect to the construction and maintenance of state highways.[16] Thus a statute authorizing county highway commissioners to construct county highways does not give them any power with respect to the construction of state highways,[17] nor does the general authority and duty of a town to maintain its public ways give it authority to construct state-aid highways,[18] and a county commissioners' court cannot restore a country road to the rank of a state highway, or enforce its improvement as such, after its discontinuance as a link in the state highway system by the state highway department.[19] However, the legislature has the power to authorize the county commissioners of the various counties to take such action as they deem necessary to carry out a state-wide program in the field of highways,[20] and some authority or duty with respect to the construction or maintenance of state highways is sometimes conferred or imposed by statute on counties,[21] further, the fact that a state highway system has been provided for has been held not to prevent cities and local communities from furnishing additional facilities by opening streets in cities and building feeder roads into the more remote and isolated parts of highway districts, or from repairing country roads already opened but needing improvement [22] Joint action of the county and state authorities is sometimes required before a highway can become a state-aid road,[23] and, where the statute commits the duty and power of selecting particular lateral roads to be improved from state funds to the state roads commission and the county commissioners of the respective counties, the selection must be made by the concurrent acts of both [24] It may be necessary for the local authorities or municipalities to initiate the proposition and submit it to the state highway authorities for approval,[25] but the consent of the state highway commission may be required before any change proposed by a county board in the system of prospective state highways can become effective [26] In the absence of an express requirement of the statute, county authorities, under their power to appropriate funds for any good and necessary purpose for the use of the county, may, without previous authorization by vote of the people, contribute general county funds toward the improvement of a highway in the county selected as a part of the state highway system [27]

Powers and duties as to the construction and maintenance of county or township roads usually rest with the local authorities, although under some statutes the state authorities have certain limited powers with respect to such roads.

With respect to its maintenance, a road which has been adopted and approved as a part of the county road system is a county road,[28] and it has been held that a public highway becomes a county road from the date of the final decree of the court directing the county to enter upon, take over, and improve the road [29] The authority or duty to provide for, construct, or maintain county or township roads usually is conferred or imposed on the governing or other authorities of the county or township, such as county commissioners,[30] and it has been held proper to assume that a road as to which county commissioners took jurisdiction to order specific repairs was a county road [31] Under some statutes a county board cannot make a road a county highway without taking the steps prescribed by statute for making such highway a part of the system of prospective state highways,[32] and the consent of the state highway commission is sometimes required before any change proposed by a county board in the system of prospective county highways can become effective [33]

no jurisdiction over such roads or any right to direct the county authorities to provide therefor[35] Fiscal courts of counties possess no jurisdiction to provide for the construction of county highways,[36] being confined to the expenditure of county funds in maintaining, and acquiring rights of way for, public county roads after the county court has properly established them over the selected routes,[37] and the fiscal court of a county cannot expend money to repair a road which has never been taken over by the county as part of its system of roads[38]

d. Agreements between Governmental Authorities

Agreements for the construction or repair of roads may be made between governmental authorities, as, for example, between the state and a political subdivision thereof, or between two political subdivisions Contracts of this nature must be executed by officials having the requisite authority and will be construed according to the rules applicable to contracts generally

The general rules governing the construction of contracts have been applied to contracts between governmental authorities for road construction[39] A county which has been guilty of breach of contract for the construction or improvement of a state highway which it could have lawfully performed will be liable for the damages resulting from the breach,[40] but, if the county is without authority to make improvements on designated state highways, it cannot lawfully contract so to do,[41] and consequently it will not be liable for failure to perform an unauthorized undertaking[42] A county cannot contract away the right of the state to construct a state road in such manner as the state sees fit[43]

Between state and political subdivision An agreement for the construction, improvement, or maintenance of a highway may properly be made between a state or a state agency and a political subdivision of the state,[44] although legislation in clear terms is required to authorize a partnership relation between the state and one of its towns for the construction of state-aid highways[45] While the agreement need not be in any particular form,[46] it must nevertheless be duly executed by officials having the requisite authority to act,[47] and must not contain terms which are beyond the power of such officials to make[48] A contract whereby a state agency agrees with an inferior body to build a particular road has been held not to compel it to discharge its contracted duty in all events,[49] as, for example, where, by reason of a change in circumstances, great loss would result to the state as a whole by building the road[50]

Between political subdivisions The extent to which political subdivisions of the state may agree between themselves on matters concerning the construction or improvement of roads depends on the terms of the governing statutes[51] Under some,[52] but not other,[53] statutory provisions a county can enter into a contract with a city or township for the construction, improvement, or maintenance of a road on the agreement of the city or township to pay certain amounts, and by virtue of some statutes a county and township may join in the improvement of a state highway if the highway department approves[54] A statute providing that a road may be improved through the cooperation of a city and county is not mandatory and does not deprive the city of its right to cooperate or not as it sees fit;[55] and, if such a statute permits cooperation only if the work is done under the provisions of the statute, cooperation either before the work is done or after it is completed is prohibited where the work is done otherwise than under such provisions[56]

With federal authorities A contract between local and federal authorities for road construction or maintenance can properly be made only after the completion of such preliminary requirements as are prescribed by statute,[57] and should not contain provisions which are beyond the scope of the powers of such authorities[58]

(2) A statute prohibiting contracts for road work in which the period for payment of the contract price extends for more than ten years is not violated by a contract between a state and county which stipulates no period for its completion, since in such case the law implies a reasonable time which, in view of the statute, cannot exceed ten years—Bullock County v Sherlock, 5 So 2d 800, 242 Ala 262

should be undertaken promptly and completed within a reasonable time

While the officials having charge of the construction and repair of roads have some discretion as to the time when and the circumstances under which the work should be done,[59] ordinarily they must do the work promptly[60] and within a reasonable time,[61] after such preliminaries as may have been prescribed by the applicable statutes.[62] Justifiable delay does not cause them to lose jurisdiction over the matter,[63] and they are not required to repair immediately any particular road when the instrumentalities under their control may be otherwise allocated and engaged at places where there is greater need,[64] or, as shown infra § 178, when the necessary funds are unavailable.

§ 178. —— As Dependent on Availability of Funds

The duty to improve a road generally depends on the availability of funds; but some repairs may and should be made notwithstanding the funds on hand are insufficient to make all necessary improvements, particularly where means exist for obtaining additional funds

While there is authority holding that the duty to repair is absolute,[65] and that the question of ability to maintain the highway in good repair is not open in an action for a defective highway, at least where the statute providing for the repair of highways is peremptory,[66] the duty to repair and consequent liability for failure to do so has in many cases been held to be dependent on availability of funds for the work.[67] It is not necessary that there be sufficient funds on hand at any one time to make all necessary improvements,[68] and, where funds are lacking to complete an entire road program, the authorities may determine on which part of the program the available funds should be used.[69] Liability for failure to construct or repair a road cannot be avoided where the means of obtaining sufficient funds are at hand,[70] as, for example, by tax-

Assessment

(1) Under a statute authorizing work to proceed on a road improvement any time after the assessment has been made, the word "made" refers to the time when the commissioner files with the clerk of the court the amounts of the damages and benefits.—Munson v. MacDonald, 155 A. 910, 113 Conn. 651.

(2) Declaration in statute that all land within proposed highway district would be benefited at least to extent of contemplated improvements, without making assessment thereof, is arbitrary finding and does not authorize improvement until it is first ascertained that special benefits to land will equal or exceed cost of improvement.—Meek v. Christian, 270 S.W. 614, 168 Ark. 313.

Prior to payment for old road

"The fact that the law authorizes the improvement of roads implies that a new road can be built on the site of the old one, before the old one has been fully paid for if it becomes necessary or advisable to do so."—State v. Hess, 204 P. 695, 696, 110 Kan. 596.

In providing for the construction of a road the legislature may properly limit the cost thereof.—Thompson v. Mann, 252 S.W. 4, 159 Ark. 391.

Availability of state funds

Designation of part to be improved

Where the funds available were insufficient to complete the entire road building program of a county and a city therein proceeded without objection of the county highway commission to pave a street which was part of the original county program, such action was held equivalent to a determination that the road in question was not one designated to be improved by the county commission.—Peterson v. Chalmers, 240 P. 165, 29 Ariz. 237.

70. Advancement by private persons

The authorities should commence the steps looking to the improvement of the road where, pursuant to statute, private persons having a ation,[71] additional assessment,[72] borrowing,[73] taking a small amount from funds due for repairs already made,[74] or making a transfer from a fund not exhausted by the building of another road,[75] nor will such liability be avoided where the defect has existed during a time within which funds could have been had,[76] or where repairs can be made on the credit of the town as authorized by statute,[77] or where the road committee has power to call out the inhabitants to do the work,[78] or, in the case of the liability of a town, where the insufficiency of funds in the hands of road officers of the town is due to the fault of another town officer.[79] An order directing a road improvement cannot be disregarded by township supervisors merely on their assertion that the funds in their hands are necessary for other purposes,[80] but a township committee will not be required to appropriate to the opening of a new road the moneys voted expressly for reparation of the old highways.[81]

a. In general

b. State highways and highway systems

a. In General

The method or plan of work in constructing, maintaining, or repairing highways is in the discretion of the highway authorities, within the restrictions of law and subject to the rights of abutters.

The method or plan of work in the construction, maintenance, or repair of highways is in the discretion or judgment of the highway authorities,[82] within the restrictions imposed by law,[83] and subject to the rights of abutting owners,[84] and the courts will not interfere except in cases of fraud or manifest injustice or abuse of discretion.[85] The proper officers may direct generally what roads,[86] and how much, or what portions, thereof,[87] shall be improved or constructed, specify the character and amount of work needed,[88] and provide for sidewalks,[89] sidepaths,[90] railroad rights of way,[91] and their duties extend to remedying defects and obstructions caused by snow.[92]

Under governing statutes, the authorities may have the power to alter the details of the plans in order better to carry out the improvement as originally contemplated,[93] so long as the character of the improvement is not changed[94] and the authorized limit of expenditure is not exceeded,[95] but they are not authorized to change the plan of the improvement to a wholly different one,[96] without submitting the revised plan for approval[97]

Under express statutory authority a county court may change the route of a road as described and laid out in an act constituting an improvement district to a route designated in the order of the county court where the termini remain the same,[98] hence it may change the route to that shown by the survey prepared by the state highway department[99] So the board of commissioners of the district may make changes in the route not constituting an entire departure from the improvement contemplated in the statute,[1] but it may not adopt a route materially different from that prescribed by the act creating the district.[2] Further, the creation of an improvement district is not invalidated by the fact that the commissioners are authorized by the act creating it to select or vary the routes of the roads to be improved[3]

The abandonment of construction of a portion of a highway cannot be shown by mere unauthorized and unofficial letters by members of the local commission to the state highway department in an effort to procure state and federal aid[4]

b. State Highways and Highway Systems

(1) In general
(2) Location and establishment
(3) Alteration and relocation
(4) Abandonment or discontinuance

(1) In General

The construction and improvement of state highways and state highway systems are, broadly speaking, governed by the discretion of the officers intrusted with the duty, as limited by the terms of the statutes under which they act

Under statutory authority a state highway commission or other body having authority over the construction and improvement of the state highways may build any kind of a thoroughfare which it desires,[5] and in accomplishing its statutory duties to maintain such highways its judgment is supreme[6] if exercised within its statutory authority,[7] the courts being without power to interfere with its discretionary action within the scope of its authority or the exercise of powers conferred by statute on the sole ground that its action is characterized by lack of wisdom or sound judgment,[8] it being necessary that the reviewing power of the courts be exercised with caution.[9] Where authority is conferred on the state highway officers to designate, locate, and alter roads of the state highway system, they may do so without consent of the local authorities.[10]

Plans and specifications The preparation of a plan of a proposed improvement is not necessary unless required by statute.[11] Where the statute so provides, the plans and specifications for the improvement must be on file in designated offices at the time of advertisement for bids for the proposed contract.[12]

Order of construction Where a particular route has been legally selected and designated by the commission, the portion which shall be first constructed is, as a rule, within the discretion of the board.[13]

State-aid highways The proceedings for the improvement of state-aid highways are statutory and are invalid unless in conformity with the statutory provisions.[14] When the local authorities have abandoned their intention of collaborating with the state authorities in the establishment of a state-aid highway, they may proceed under the provisions of other statutes authorizing them to lay out and open roads[15] Where a contract between the state highway commission and the county authorities whereby the proceeds of a county bond issue are to be supplemented by state funds for the construction of roads within the county provides that the order in which the roads shall be selected shall be left to the discretion of the state highway commission and the fiscal court of the county, the road to be first constructed may be agreed on pending an appeal from an order requiring the highway commission to build the road on another route when it undertook the construction[16]

Sidewalks The state is not, except as required by statute, under an obligation to build or improve sidewalks or sidepaths along state highways[17]

(2) Location and Establishment
- (a) In general
- (b) Discretion of highway authorities
- (c) Deviation from existing highways
- (d) Time for location
- (e) Procedure
- (f) Revocation of order

(a) In General

State highways and state highway systems may be located or laid out by the state legislature or by state agencies or local authorities to which it has delegated its power, and specific constitutional and statutory designations of their location must be conformed to Federal-aid roads must be laid out in accordance with federal and state laws

A state legislature has authority to lay out the routes of the highways of the state,[18] and its action with regard thereto is binding on the other departments or instrumentalities of the state government[19] The legislature may exercise this power through its own agencies or delegate it to inferior bodies[20] The purpose of vesting the power of locating roads in county and state highway commissions and of not vesting it in the authorities of minor political subdivisions is to maintain a uniform system[21]

The location of state highways is, under the statutes, ordinarily vested exclusively in the state highway officers,[22] and such authority cannot be exercised by the courts[23] In the absence of a grant of such power, however, a highway commission has no authority to determine the route of a public road,[24] such power is not implied from a power given to construct highways[25]

Federal aid road The designation and location of a federal aided state highway must be in accordance with the provisions of the federal and state statutes[26] So, in order to obtain federal aid on any particular location of a state highway, the location, where the statute so requires, must be approved by the federal bureau of roads[27]

Specific constitutional or statutory designations As stated infra subdivision b (2) (b) of this section, the discretion often delegated to the highway authorities with regard to the location of highways must be exercised within the terms of the statutes conferring it, and after the legislature has definitely located a state highway it is not, except as provided by statute, within the power of a state highway board or commission to depart from that location [28] Where the statute designates the particular towns and cities through which the highway must pass, such designation is controlling on the highway authorities,[29] but, where the statute, although stating the towns through which the highway shall run, permits the highway commission to make local changes, it has power to make changes from the points or places specified in the act [30] The general rules of statutory construction apply with reference to statutes designating specific routes or highways,[31] and, where a statute contains a map showing in detail what roads are included, such map is as binding as any other portion of the statute [32]

Connection of county seats or particular communities Where the statute contemplates that county seats shall be served by the highway system substantially as designated on a map incorporated in the act, the highway commission has no discretion as to whether a county seat shall be served by the highway system [33] On the other hand, it has been held that, although the statute authorized the highway commission to designate main traveled roads with a view of connecting all county seats, the highway commissioner is not required to construct a highway between two county seats where, after fair and adequate investigation and consideration of feasible routes, he has determined that it is impracticable because of physical difficulties and prohibitive expense,[34] and this is true notwithstanding the highway commissioner in exercising his discretion to locate and improve roads must have regard for the declared legislative purpose of connecting county seats,[35] and it is not necessary that the connection between county seats be made by the shortest possible route [36]

Statutes requiring highway routes to afford intervening communities between designated points reasonable connection with one another must be obeyed,[37] but "reasonable connection" does not require that the road pass through the principal part

Bond election not specifying route

(1) Where a particular highway all through a county is a federal-aided state highway at the time proceedings are begun to raise county funds by a bond issue and where the terms of the election for the bonds do not specify the particular route, its designation and location in every part thereof can be made legally only by the state highway commission under its own plans and specifications with the approval of the federal bureau of roads—Singletary v Heathman Tex Civ App, 300 S W 242, affirmed Heathman v Singletary, Com App, 12 S W 2d 150

(2) Where a state highway commission in good faith, within the scope of its authority, relocates a state highway after a highway bond election in order to secure federal aid, and no route was designated in the order for election the taxpayers cannot restrain the county commissioners' court from appropriating and expending the proceeds of the sale of bonds toward constructing the highway—Heathman v Singletary, Tex Com App, 12 S W 2d 150, affirming, Civ App, Singletary v Heathman, Civ App, 300 S W 242

37. "Intervening community"

(1) "As used in the act . . an 'intervening community' is intend-of a community[38] It cannot be held as a matter of law that a town is disconnected from a state highway system when a road passes within three hundred feet of its railroad station[39]

Requirement that highways shall run to, near, or touch certain communities A requirement that highways shall "extend, as nearly as possible," along described routes, and "shall touch" designated towns does not require that the highways go through such towns,[40] and accessibility, rather than actual contact, is required[41]

"To" a named city, in a statutory description of a route, has been held to mean to the city limits[42]

The term "near," as used in a statute requiring a highway to be near a named locality, is indefinite, and implies that considerable latitude is given the authorities in fixing the exact location[43]

Designation of route without specification of highways Where the statute providing for a highway system designated particular routes without selecting the specific highways, the department vested with authority to make final decisions in the carrying out of the work has authority to select the particular highways within reasonable limits on the highway route designated by the statute[44]

Highway not previously located Where a road designated as a highway route has not been previously definitely and finally located, it may be located by the state highway commission on taking it over and incorporating it as a permanent link of the state system of highways[45]

Trunk highways. Where the intention of the constitution is apparent, trunk highways provided for do not extend within the limits of cities of the first class[46]

Superimposing routes. In locating state highways it may, at least in the absence of statutory prohibition, be proper to locate one highway on the roadbed used by another for a short distance out of the particular terminal point[47]

Effect of laying out The laying out of highway rights of way by the state highway commission manifests a purpose to acquire an easement in the entire width of each highway for the use of the public, although only a part would ordinarily be used for travel[48]

(b) Discretion of Highway Authorities

In the location of highway improvements, highway authorities are commonly regarded as vested with broad discretion, to be exercised in conformity to governing statutes, the courts will not interfere with the exercise of such discretion unless it is abused In locating state highways, the primary interest to be considered is that of the state at large, rather than any local or private interest

Subject to specific limitations imposed by the constitutional or statutory provisions under which they act, the authorities intrusted with the supervision and control of state highways and state highway systems ordinarily are vested with discretion as to the location of particular highways and routes,[49] such a discretion must, however, be ex-

ed by the Legislature to mean persons living more or less in proximity, who for the purpose of travel between the principal cities mentioned on the routes defined would naturally select approximately the same route or general direction of travel" —Fisher v Department of Public Works and Buildings, 170 N E 283, 338 Ill 222—Watts v Department of Public Works and Buildings, 160 N E 201, 205, 328 Ill 587

ercised within the limits imposed by constitutional and statutory provisions.[50] Where the statute confers on the state highway commission power to abandon or change any part of the state highway system, it is given a broad discretion in the selection of the routes to make up such highway system.[51] So, where the statute authorizes the designation and construction of roads to connect principal population centers of the state, without naming them although limiting the number of miles of road which may be constructed, the state highway authorities are given discretion as to the choice of the population centers to be connected and in the location of the roads connecting them.[52]

Effect of general designation of route. The fact that the general route of a highway is prescribed by statute, as where its terminal points are fixed or cities, towns, or other intermediate points are designated through which the highway must pass, does not otherwise restrict the discretion of the highway authorities as to its location.[53] So a statutory designation of a road as running south and west through intermediate points to another designated point does not require that it must run either directly south or directly west at any given point.[54]

Judicial control and review of discretion. The courts will not interfere with the location of a highway route or highway in the absence of an abuse of the discretion vested in the highway authorities,[55] as where their action is clearly unrea-

Failure to investigate routes

(1) "A decision by the commissioner to construct a parallel road . . reached without a fair and reasonable investigation of feasible routes which would meet the declared purpose of the highway statute would be a gross or palpable abuse of discretion, and, in fact, a failure to exercise discretion, amounting to an arbitrary and capricious exercise of power"—Cheatham County v Baker, 30 S W 2d 234, 238, 161 Tenn 222

(2) Failure to make location survey held not to show that investigation of routes was unfair and inadequate—Cheatham County v Baker, 64 S W 2d 31, 16 Tenn App 1

a reasonable difference of opinion.[60] In locating the route of a state highway as authorized by statute, a state highway commission acts in an administrative capacity notwithstanding it is required to exercise judgment and discretion, hence certiorari will not lie to review its determination.[61] Where the power of designating a highway route is, under the statutes, vested in the state highway department and not in the county officials, the state highway commissioners are necessary parties to any litigation affecting the exercise of such power.[62] Where the statute provides that no action shall be maintained against the highway commission to determine the location of any state highways or portion thereof except by the road-governing body of the county in which the road is situated or the county seat or principal town affected, the action of the highway commission cannot be reviewed by the supreme court in an appeal from a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a complaint in an action brought by citizens and taxpayers.[63]

Factors to be considered In locating state highways, or highways on which state funds are used or which are treated as part of a state-wide system, the primary interest to be considered is that of the state at large, and the general public good, and not the interest of any particular locality or any private interest.[64] As between two possible routes, comparative costs of construction are to be considered,[65] but are not, of themselves, a determining factor[66] Directness is also to be considered,[67] but is not necessarily conclusive.[68] Other factors which, in the application of governing statutes, have been held properly considered in locating highway improvements are comparative cost of maintenance,[69] safety,[70] relation of the particular road whose construction is under consideration to the other roads of the state-wide system,[71] adaptability to the persons using the route,[72] probable amount of travel,[73] volume of traffic accommodated,[74] accommodation of future, as well as present, traffic,[75] convenience in the operation of traffic,[76] the service of as large a territory as possible,[77] the securing of main trunk line routes through the state,[78] comparative topographic and construction difficulties,[79] center of population of communities served,[80] and customary line of travel[81] A proposed route which has been the principal and accepted means of travel for a number of years must be presumed to be a direct and feasible route, or the most direct and feasible one[82]

While an avoidance of grade railroad crossings is desirable, it is not necessarily controlling as to the discretion of the highway commissioners in the location of a highway.[83]

State highway authorities properly exercise a discretion which they possess with regard to the location of a state highway in selecting a location on which the federal authorities are willing to extend federal aid[84]

Surrender of discretion Where, under the statutes, the location of a highway forming a part of the state highway system is within the discretion of the local officials, such officials cannot surrender their discretion to the judgment of the highway officials of another state[85]

Connecting link in foreign state

A local board of highway commissioners cannot surrender its discretion with regard to the construction of a local highway to the action of the highway officials of a foreign state by the suspension of work until an agreement is reached with the foreign highway commissioners pro-

Representations or promises in connection with bond elections The discretion of the authorities as to the location of a highway cannot be controlled by representations made by individual members of the highway commission or members of the public prior to the election for the issuance of bonds that the highway would be located on a particular route where such representations are not shown to have been authorized or ratified by the board[86] In any event, the county authorities are not bound to construct a highway on any particular route unless their actions are sufficient to constitute a contract with, or a pledge to, the voters that the proceeds of the bond sale should be used in the construction of a highway on that route[87] So the commissioners' court of a county or the state highway commission is not precluded by reason of promises by a publicity committee during a campaign for a highway bond issue or by reason of having designated the highway over a certain route and secured an appropriation for the construction thereof from changing the designation of and relocating the route of a state highway along a shorter way[88]

Personal disqualification of members of board or commission Since a highway commission is not a court exercising judicial functions, but is an administrative body, its members are not affected by the common-law principles which govern qualification of judges and judicial officers,[89] and the disqualifications mentioned in the statutes under which they act are exclusive[90]

(c) Deviation from Existing Highways

The highway authorities may deviate from existing roads or lay out new ones in the location of state highways or state highway routes under their general powers to alter or locate such routes unless they are specifically restricted by the statutes under which they act

The fact that a statute establishes certain highway routes or state roads or highways and describes them by their termini, or by their termini and intermediate points, does not in itself require the adoption of the route then occupied by the existing road between such points[91] Further, the right to deviate from such road or to establish a new road is implicit in statutory authorization to purchase or condemn rights of way,[92] or to make alterations or changes in the highways[93] So, where the statute requires the highway commissioner to designate main traveled roads to be included in the general highway plan of the state and authorizes him to alter the course or grade or otherwise improve any road selected, he may designate the construction of a highway on a new route that does not follow any existing road[94] However, it has been held that, where the statute establishing a state highway system provides that it shall consist of the highways on certain described routes, incorporating the highways constituting the then existing, more or less loosely connected, system of highways which had been created by the state highway commission with the consent and cooperation of the local road authorities of the several counties, the intent of the legislature

Tenn—Cheatham County v Baker, 61 S W 2d 31, 37, 16 Tenn App 1 "A fair construction of the statute would be that ordinarily, and as far as the public interest would permit, a main traveled road should be followed, but whenever by reason of undue expense or physical obstacles this is not feasible, the commissioner may choose another route or not build at all"—Cheatham County v. Baker, supra.

that the commission, in constructing the highways on the designated routes, shall maintain the identity of the then existing roads is indicated,[95] but the principle has been held inapplicable to a highway built by the state highway commission under the authority to adopt any route which it considers wise.[96]

Under a statute providing for the construction of improved roads on the public highways of the state along designated routes and conferring on the highway department the right to make minor changes in the location of such routes, while the purpose is evident that existing public highways shall be improved as far as possible,[97] where the conditions are such that new highways must be established in order to carry out the intent of the statute and best serve the public good, the department has discretion to make such minor changes,[98] although the departures from the public highways contemplated usually constitute a small proportion of the whole route, which forms an integral portion thereof, and are not independent public highways.[99] So, although it may be possible to lay out a route entirely on existing highways, the circumstances may be such as to warrant the department in deviating therefrom.[1]

The mere declaration in the order for a bond election that the money shall be expended on a designated highway does not require that the location of the new roadway coincide with the location of the old roadway throughout.[2]

Discretion and factors justifying deviation. While highway officials may not act arbitrarily in deviating from existing highways,[3] a court is not justified in setting aside their action in so doing merely because it doubts the wisdom or necessity of the deviation,[4] and such deviation has been held justified where greater safety, or more favorable traffic conditions,[5] as by the avoidance of grade crossings,[6] or greater convenience of travel,[7] or a saving in the cost of construction or operation,[8] would be attained thereby.

(d) Time for Location

Unless required by statute, the highway need not be located before the funds are advanced for its construction, nor need the entire route be located before construction on a part is begun.

the route shall have been definitely located before work may be begun on any part of it[9] Under a contract whereby county commissioners advanced money to a state highway commission for highways to be located by the commission, it was held that the location could be made at any time before construction[10]

(c) Procedure

The procedure prescribed by the particular statute involved is controlling.

Where the statutes provide the procedure for the location and changes therein of state highways, the procedure established by general highway statutes is inapplicable[11] The fact that a state highway commission has been vested with powers formerly exercised by county authorities does not render statutes governing such authorities when laying out new roads binding on the commission[12] The effect of state-aid laws in some jurisdictions is to permit state-aid roads to be located and built without complying with provisions of the former laws as to the laying out and building of roads[13] A statute authorizing the future location of a highway to be designated and its width and lines established is applicable only to cases falling within its provisions.[14]

(f) Revocation of Order

An order for location may be revoked before vested rights have been acquired

An order by an administrative tribunal locating a state highway is subject to revocation or change until vested rights have been acquired because thereof[15] The alteration or abandonment of the highway after establishment is considered infra subdivisions b (3), (4) of this section.

(3) Alteration and Relocation

The state highway authorities may, where, and only where, authorized by constitutional or statutory provisions, alter or change an established state highway route or highway, and their discretion, where the statutory procedure is followed, ordinarily will not be reviewed.

Where a state highway route or state highway has been established by the constitution or statute or proceedings thereunder, it cannot be altered or relocated[16] in the absence of express authority, and the power to alter or relocate it may be expressly limited by statute[17] However, the state highway

Roads on map

(1) Where a map is adopted showing in detail the roads which shall constitute the state highway system, but the highway commission is given power to change, alter, add to, or discontinue the roads so shown, subject to statutory provisos, the highway commission has power to deviate from highways shown on such authorities under express authority to alter or relocate,[18] or to make necessary changes and additions in,[19] the highways constituting the state highway system may alter or relocate an established highway, for example, for the securing of the public safety,[20] this latter being the only ground on which an alteration may be had under some statutes.[21] Notwithstanding the highway commission is not regarded as having power to make substantial or radical departures, it may, in the construction of an existing highway, make changes and relocations to eliminate curves, to shorten the alignment of the road, to alter grades, and to utilize to the best advantage the topography of the ground where the road is located.[22] Although a portion of the original route was selected because it was already paved, the commission may depart therefrom where the paving is so inferior as to make its use impracticable.[23]

The exercise of their discretionary power by highway officers regarding changes is not subject to judicial review.[24] However, although the board or officers are given power to change, alter, or discontinue existing roads, subject to a proviso that certain conditions shall be met, their decision as to the matters involved in such conditions presents a mixed question of law and fact which is subject to judicial review in the manner ordinarily prevailing as to the review of decisions of administrative bodies.[25]

tentatively located prior to an election for a local bond issue, while an order for the election fixing definite and specific places as points to be reached by the road will be given effect, the actual location on the ground of the intermediate route is subject to such changes as are necessary to obtain the approval of state and federal authorities [27]

Effect of general designation of route Where the statute merely designates the general route of the state highway as running to, through, or between certain designated points, without specifying the particular route to be followed, the state highway board can relocate such highway after it has been originally located [28]

Effect of map A provision that the highway commission shall not have authority to eliminate any part of the contemplated highway system shown on a map referred to does not prevent a change in the route between specific termini shown on such map [29]

Securing federal aid Under an authorization to comply with the conditions imposed by the federal authorities for the allocation of federal funds to the state for highway construction, a highway commission may change the location of highways when required to do so by the federal government as a condition to securing federal aid [30] A similar conclusion has been reached under a statute authorizing the state highway commission to cooperate with the state highway department and the federal government and to have the power to do all things necessary to the securing of such federal and state aid as may at any time be available [31]

Rights of landowners Except as restricted by statute, the state highway commission, where, when acting in a reasonable exercise of the discretion conferred on it, it believes that it is in the best interest of the public that the route of a highway be changed, may change such route notwithstanding the effect of such change is seriously to damage or to destroy the value of property along the old location [32] So, also, a state highway commission is not estopped from changing the route of a highway to a particular location because of a promise made to a landowner to change the route to another location, where no authority in the promisor, or want of power in the commission to make the change, is shown [33]

Agreements not to alter The state highway authorities have no power, in the absence of statute, to make a contract to maintain the designation of a road or route as a state highway,[34] nor is there any implied contract between the state authorities and the abutting owners arising out of the issuance and sale of bonds for the construction of the road as originally designated and located [35] The discretion of state highway officers as to the changing of a state highway route cannot be surrendered by them[36] or by any state officer,[37] and no promise or agreement by them can create a vested right in the holder of adjoining property that the main line of the route shall continue to exist as promised [38] Hence, the state highway authorities are not bound by an agreement not to change the location of the route or highway whether such agreement was made by them[39] or by any state officer.[40]

Procedure In the absence of statutory restriction, the same proceeding may be one for an alteration of a highway under one section of the statute and for a change in the system of highways under another section[41] In the absence of statutory authority, the county court in acting on a petition by the state highway commission for changes in the location of the highway has no authority to make changes in the project but may only grant or deny the petition[42] Notice of a hearing as to a proposed change in the highway system is not necessary unless required by statute[43] Where notice of a hearing for location of the route has been given, it is not necessary, in the absence of statute, to give notice to the same people of a second hearing for a change of the route[44] The failure to file a definite description of the highway and a map thereof on relocation, as provided for by statute, cannot be complained of by a taxpayer[45] On collateral attack on the order of the county authorities for a change in the location of a state highway, it will be presumed that the state engineer was authorized to sign the petition for the state highway department[46]

Operation and effect Where a plan for relocating a state highway is approved as required by law, the road as relocated becomes the state highway in place of the old road[47] According to some authorities the selection of a new route by the state highway commission for a new road constitutes an abandonment of the old road.[48] However, according to other authorities, while abandonment of the old highway is usually an incident of a relocation,[49] the relocation of a state highway is not necessarily an abandonment of the old[50] So the fact that the old highway is no longer kept up by the state highway authorities after the construction of a new relocated highway does not establish abandonment or negative the presumption of the continuance of the old highway under county maintenance or under private maintenance with approval of the county[51] Although the relocation of a portion of a state highway is several miles long, it may, in view of the length of the entire highway, be regarded not as the laying out of a new highway but as a change in an existing one[52]

(4) Abandonment or Discontinuance

(a) In general

(b) Operation and effect

(a) In General

The state highway authorities may, when authorized by law, abandon or discontinue a state highway, and their discretion ordinarily will not be reviewed, but the statutory procedure must be adhered to

The general rule is that a state highway can be abandoned only by the authority which created it[53] A power granted to state highway officers to establish highways does not include the power to vacate them,[54] and a power to change or alter has been held not to include the power to abandon entirely[55] The state highway commission may abandon any part of the existing highway where such power is expressly conferred by statute[56] A statute authorizing the state highway department to resurvey and

Substitution of routes

Under the power given it by statute, the state highway commission had authority to abandon one county road as a state-aided route and select relocate in their entirety any roads taken over by it as state-aid roads, keeping in view only the control points, permits the highway commission to construct an entirely new state-aid road[57] However, the power merely to relocate does not include the power of establishing a new road and of entirely abandoning an existing road,[58] but implies preservation of the identity of the way without material change[59] Where there is, however, no material change in the general direction and location of the designated road other than such as is dictated by the public interest, in establishing a road for use in the state highway system the judgment of the state highway commission will not be interfered with.[60] Under a power to abandon or change any part of, or to add to, the state highways constituting the state highway system, the commission may abandon or change any part whether or not the abandoned portion has actually been constructed[61]

A contract of the highway commission to reconvey unconditionally the right of way on vacation of a highway to be located requires a conveyance free from any burden or encumbrance making the conveyance conditional and not absolute[62]

In the absence of statute notice to the state is not required in proceedings to vacate a state highway[63]

Judicial control. In general the statutory power of a state highway body to discontinue a highway is not subject to judicial control except where its exercise is capricious, arbitrary, or fraudulent[64] The exercise of the power to abandon a state highway and establish another in lieu thereof is administrative rather than essentially legislative[65] Under statutes empowering state highway commissions to discontinue roads provided no roads shall be discontinued so as to disconnect "principal towns" and highway systems of other states, the decision as to what is a "principal town" is a mixed question of law and fact not to be determined by the mere fact that the name of the town appears on certain maps[66]

As between state and local authorities. When a state highway commission establishes a highway as a "state route," there can be no abandonment thereof as a county highway, even though the road remains such for all other purposes until declared a "state highway,"[67] and when a state highway department has induced a county to expend money jointly with it for the construction of a road, there can be no abandonment on the part of the state of its responsibility for the continued upkeep of the highway[68] Where the legislature has enacted a statute governing relocation of so-called "state-aid roads," and the consequent closing or abandonment of the old right of way, and has placed such matters in the hands of the state highway department and not with county officials, prior statutes regulating the discontinuance of the old roads by county officials and prescribing the procedure therefor are inapplicable to the discontinuance of a state-aid road[69]

(b) Operation and Effect

A state highway, or a portion thereof, which has been abandoned by the state highway authorities, and which has not been thereafter maintained as a public road by the local authorities, ceases to exist as a highway for the general public as against the owners in fee of the land, although abutting owners ordinarily may not be deprived of access to their property.

state road system which have been abandoned by the state highway authorities, but which remain open and in general use by the public, constitute neighborhood public roads,[71] while under other statutes a road formerly maintained by the county reverts to the county on abandonment by the state, and final abandonment lies wholly with the county authorities and must be accomplished in the manner provided for by statute.[72] Where the road has been abandoned by the state and is not maintained by the local authorities, it ceases to exist as a highway for the use of the general public as against the owners in fee of the land it traversed.[73] On abandonment of the original road on relocation of the state highway, it reverts to the jurisdiction of the county.[74]

Effect on abutting owners. The designation of a road as a state highway does not confer on abutting owners any special property right which will allow them to prevent the highway commission from designating another road as such state highway route, notwithstanding it would result in a diversion of traffic.[75] Where a part of a state highway is abandoned on relocation by the state highway authorities, the abandoned part of the old road may not be closed without the consent of persons whose property fronts thereon or over whose lands it passes,[76] abutting owners have a right of egress and ingress from and to their property of which they may not be deprived by the owners in fee of the land over which the highway traversed, at least where there has been continuous use of the road for the period of prescription.[77]

The doctrine that, where abutting owners have purchased with reference to a map showing the streets, the municipality cannot close such streets to the use of the abutting owners has been held not applicable to alterations or changes in public roads forming a part of the state highway system.[78]

Extent of right

(1) The right of an abutting owner as against the owners of the fee over which the highway crossed is confined to the exigency of egress and ingress, and such persons are not entitled to have the whole road throughout its length left to them in its original unimpaired condition, on the basis of mere inconvenience in reaching objectives formerly more accessible, at least where the highway has not been used by the abutting owner for the prescriptive period—Mosteller v Southern Ry Co, 17 S E 2d 133, 136, 220 N C 275

(2) "Ancient doctrines pertaining to roads of the horse and buggy days, when those roads were for the most part trails through the woods and fields, must be applied to modern conditions with caution and sound discretion. Once, 'ingress and egress' were practically all such a road afforded, and there is logic in the thought that it is all of such a doctrine which should survive."—Mosteller v Southern Ry Co, supra

(3) After an abutting owner has used the highway for the period of prescription, he has been held to be entitled, as against the owner in fee of the land beneath such road, to have the entire width of the old road kept open for the purpose of providing a reasonable means of ingress and egress to and from his property, even though a less satisfactory and less valuable means of ingress and egress would remain if the contested portion of the old road were closed—Long v Melton, 10 S E 2d 699, 218 N C 94

petition for road improvement may also limit their discretion

In the absence of any statutory limitation or restriction, it is for the highway authorities to decide what materials are to be used in the construction or repair of highways[79] Under certain statutes, prescribing in some respects and to some extent the materials to be used, the officers have some latitude in the selection of the type of road to be built in any particular locality and the material to be used in its construction,[80] provided such officers act in good faith,[81] and do not pay excessive or unreasonable prices[82]

If the petition for a road improvement does not specify the character of the material that shall be used, the highway authorities have a discretion in the matter,[83] but if it specifies the character of materials to be used it is valid and binding on the authorities, and their discretion in that regard is limited,[84] and, where bonds are voted for road improvement on the representation and theory that a particular material would be used, such material should be used[85]

b. Taking Material from Abutters

Where a statute permits, but not otherwise, highway officers may take from abutters materials for construction or repair, for due compensation

In the absence of statute, highway officers have no authority to take from abutters materials for construction or repair,[86] but under some statutes they are authorized to do so, due compensation being provided.[87] The officer is the sole judge of the necessity of the taking,[88] and as long as he does not willfully annoy the owners of property a court of equity will not restrain him,[89] and an indictment may lie for obstructing him[90] However, the officer cannot pass over cultivated or improved land for this purpose,[91] nor can an overseer take for public use timber prepared for the owner's own use[92]

buildings, or other property,[93] after notice to the landowner or occupant,[94] which notice, under some statutes, must not specify a period which will expire in the winter months.[95] If the owners neglect to remove the property within the time specified it is the duty of the officer to do so,[96] but in removing without notice,[97] or before the expiration of the time allowed,[98] the officer is a trespasser, and injunction will lie to prevent an improper removal.[99] Failure to give the notice does not, however, affect the validity of the layout.[1]

§ 183. Existence and Character of Road

The duty to improve and repair public roads extends only to those legally in existence and not to roads which have never been opened or which have been abandoned; and such duty frequently depends on the class or character of the particular road in question.

Matters concerning the construction, improvement, and repair of roads frequently are affected by the character of the road,[7] and hence in considering such matters the courts have often had occasion to define a class of roads or to determine the character of particular roads as falling within the terms of particular constitutional or statutory provisions.[8]

8. Belt lines.
Under a statute authorizing the state highway commission to construct belt lines, the term "belt line" will be construed so as to give effect to the legislative intent, and a section of road divided into two segments has been considered to constitute two belt lines and hence not to violate a restriction on the length of belt lines, notwithstanding the combined length of the two segments exceeded the length allowed for one belt line.—Summer v. State Highway Commission of South Carolina, 141 S.E. 366, 143 S.C. 196.

"Connecting" routes.
Within the meaning of a constitutional provision authorizing the legislature to add to the trunk highway system additional routes connecting newly constituted county seats and other points in the state, "connecting" means directly connecting, and the additional highway must be a link in the chain by which county seats are united and must begin or end at, or pass through, the new county seat.—State v. Public highway.
A strip of land or right of way described with such certainty as to facilitate a ready identification thereof, granted to and accepted by a county for county road purposes, has been held to constitute a public highway, within the meaning of a statute permitting a county to grant the use of its highways to an adjoining county for certain construction purposes.—Watson v. Public Service Commission of State of Missouri, 53 S.Ct. 89, 287 U.S. 641, 77 L.Ed. 555.

Trunk-line highway.
Within the meaning of statutes pertaining to the construction of

The duty to improve, maintain, and repair extends to such roads, and only such, as have a legal existence as public highways,[9] by virtue of statute or statutory proceedings and formal opening,[10] dedication,[11] and acceptance,[12] or prescription,[13] or by alterations of old roads.[14] The fact that a statute speaks of the improvement of roads and the designation of roads to be improved does not confine it to established roads where a contrary intent is plain from its various provisions.[15]

The authority and duty of the state or its agencies to improve and maintain roads does not extend to a road which constitutes a mere private right of way,[16] although a byway or private way adopted for temporary use while a highway is out of repair becomes a highway for the time being, and the town is liable for injuries occasioned by failure to make it reasonably safe.[17] A landowner cannot by his act alone create a public highway so as to charge the public with responsibility for its care and maintenance, without the consent of the government acting through some authorized agency.[18]

As a general rule, the authorities are bound to keep in repair only that portion of a highway in actual use,[19] and not a highway or portion thereof which has been vacated[20] or abandoned,[21] or not completed,[22] or which has not been in use for the period required by statute.[23] The duty relates to every portion of the highway actually used for public travel,[24] although the road was laid out for the accommodation of an individual and is subject to gates and bars,[25] and although title to some of the highway is not actually in the town.[26]

Stock passageway The duty to maintain a cattle or stock passageway across a highway may rest on local authorities by virtue of contract made between them and a landowner.[27]

§ 184. —— Roads in Different Jurisdictions

In the absence of statutory provision or special arrangement, where a road extends into different jurisdictions each jurisdiction has the burden of maintaining and repairing that portion lying within its own territorial limits.

Where the center of the road forms the line between two subdivisions of the state and no crosswise division has been made, each must repair the portion on its side of the line,[28] but if, pursuant to statutory provision, a crosswise division has been made, each must repair the part of the road assigned to it.[29] trunk-line highways, a trunk-line highway continues to be such regardless of legislative restrictions as to the kind of vehicle which shall use it, where no specifications as to the type of layout or method of construction of such a road are prescribed in the statutes—Stock v. Cox, 6 A 2d 346, 125 Conn 405.

Unimproved roads

The fact that the surface of a paved road is in need of reconstruction does not make the road an unimproved road, within the meaning of statutes pertaining to the construction and repair of unimproved roads—Paterson, N & N Y R Co v Town of Belleville, 197 A 902, 120 N J Law 1.

In the absence of constitutional prohibition the legislature may authorize two or more political subdivisions of the state, contiguously situated to each other, to jointly build and maintain highways through their respective territories,[30] or may authorize one subdivision, when public convenience so demands, to extend at its own expense any of its own roads over limited portions of an adjoining subdivision,[31] but unless a special arrangement has been made, a road officer cannot extend improvements into adjacent road districts,[32] and if he does so any improvements he may make are under the control of the supervisor of the district into which they have been so extended.[33] The burden of constructing and maintaining a highway may be imposed on a territorial subdivision of the state benefited thereby, notwithstanding the highway is located outside the limits of such subdivision.[34]

In the case of a highway which passes through a municipal corporation, the part of the highway lying outside the city limits is to be improved or repaired, under some statutes, by the county, township, or district in which such part lies.[35] The power or duty to control, construct, improve, or repair the part within the municipal corporation is considered in the C J S title Municipal Corporations §§ 1042, 1044, also 44 C J. p 160 note 62–p 161 note 71, p 164 notes 28–34

§ 186. —— Power and Duty

a. General considerations
b Scope of power and duty as to surface water and drainage over abutting or adjacent land in general
c. Power, duty, and liability of state and state highway authorities
d. Landowner's right to drain into highway and to obstruct or interfere with drainage

f. Actions

a. General Considerations

Highway authorities may make proper provision for the drainage of highways, the liability of a political subdivision for acts or omissions affecting such drainage depends largely on specific statutory provision or on the nature of its interest in, or its duty with respect to, highways.

The proper authorities have power to provide for the drainage of surface water from highways,[36] and to build ditches and culverts,[37] such power being in-

Liability for expense of repair of drainage facilities

In view of L 1929 c 225 § 19, Rev St § 68–419, providing that the state highway commission shall assume the rights and liabilities of the various counties on all existing contracts for the construction, improvement, or maintenance of state highways, a county was not liable to a drainage district for moneys expended by the latter in repairing a floodgate connected with a drain in a levee of the drainage district, which drain and floodgate had been installed by the county for the purpose of draining a highway, pursuant to a contract between the county and the drainage district which imposed on the county the obligation of maintaining the drain and floodgate and of keeping them in repair, where the highway in question had become a state highway —Verdigris River Drainage Dist No 1 v City of Coffeyville, 97 P 2d 105, 150 Kan 765—Verdigris River Drainage Dist No 1 v City of Coffeyville, 86 P 2d 592, 149 Kan 191

In Texas, in view of Const art 5 § 18 giving commissioners' court the right to exercise powers and jurisdiction over all county business, and Rev St 1925 art 235, subd 6 giving commissioners' court power to exercise general control over all roads and highways, construction of drainage ditch to divert flood waters and so protect roads in county was within power and jurisdiction of commis-

cident to the power to lay out, build, and repair highways.[38]

Authority to provide for the drainage of highways involves in general the exercise of a large discretion,[39] and, therefore, as a general rule no action lies merely because of the adoption of a particular system within that authority,[40] or because of a mere error of judgment.[41] This discretion cannot be controlled by a court[42] except in case of fraud or bad faith[43] or the invasion of some private right of a citizen.[44]

In some jurisdictions, in the absence of constitutional or statutory provision imposing liability, a county is not liable for damages for injuries resulting from its negligence,[45] or from the negligence of its officers or agents,[46] with respect to the construction or maintenance of drainage facilities for a highway, the reason usually given being that, in constructing or maintaining a highway, a county exercises governmental functions or functions of a sovereign delegated by the state, or performs acts as an agency of the state, with respect to which it is not liable in the absence of constitutional or statutory provision imposing liability.[47] In some jurisdictions, in the absence of statute imposing liability, a town is not liable for failure to maintain in proper condition drainage facilities connected with a highway where no power is conferred, or duty imposed, on it to construct or maintain such facilities,[48] and it is not liable for injuries resulting from acts or omissions of a highway officer who is not an agent of the town.[49]

In some jurisdictions, however, by virtue of its proprietary interest in or control over highways, or of its power and duty with respect to construction or maintenance, a county[50] or a town[51] may be liable in damages, under some circumstances, for injuries to land abutting on, or adjacent to, a highway resulting from acts or omissions relating to drainage facilities, and in some jurisdictions a county[52] or a town[53] may be liable on the theory that the acts or omissions as to drainage created a nuisance with respect to abutting or adjacent property, but in other jurisdictions a county is not liable on the theory that a nuisance was created and maintained.[54]

(1) Counties have been held liable in damages for injuries to land resulting from the flowing of water on such land as a result of the construction or improvement of a highway and the system of drainage established for the highway in cases in which the court did not refer in its opinion to the general statutory provision now Remington Rev. St. § 951, that an action may be maintained against a county for injury to the rights of plaintiff arising from some act or omission of the county.—Whiteside v. Benton County, 195 P. 519, 114 Wash. 463.—Wendel v. Spokane, 67 P. 576, 27 Wash. 121, 91 Am. St. R. 825

(2) In view of L.1921, c. 96, § 18, under which county was responsible for the maintenance of a part of a primary state highway, the county was liable for the flooding of land due to negligence with respect to providing adequate drainage facilities.—Bush v. King County, 236 P. 298, 134 Wash. 626

(3) Owner of land abutting highway had no duty to erect barriers against flowage over raised roadway, caused by reduction of areaway for passage of water under bridge, thereby anticipating results of county's negligence.—Bush v. King County, supra

In Illinois

(1) In view of a statutory provision expressly imposing on road authorities the duty to construct good and sufficient culverts, or other convenient crossings, if a ditch is made at certain places along a highway, the view was taken that the town was liable for damages where the duty so imposed was not complied with.—Taylor v. Reed, 206 Ill. App. 479

(2) It has been held or recognized, however, that a town is not liable for the unlawful act of highway officers in diverting water from its natural course onto the land of another.—Cooney v. Town of Hartland, 95 Ill. 516.—Taylor v. Reed, supra

In New Hampshire

(1) In an action on the case, a town has been held liable in damages for injury to property abutting on a highway resulting from negligent failure to remove an obstruction from a culvert after the town had notice of conditions, since the town was bound to exercise reasonable care in maintaining the highway so as not unnecessarily to injure abutting property.—Burnham v. Windham, 88 A. 701, 77 N.H. 103

(2) Fact that plaintiff might have removed obstruction did not constitute a defense.—Burnham v. Windham, supra

(3) But the right to recover from the town for injuries to abutting property resulting from the obstruction of a culvert was denied in an early case.—Ball v. Winchester, 32 N.H. 435

(4) The right to maintain a common-law action for damages to abutting land resulting from repairing a highway and constructing drainage facilities was denied, as plaintiff had a complete remedy under a statute providing for an application to selectmen for assessment of damages.—Bartlett v. Bristol, 24 A. 906, 66 N.H. 420

(5) It was held that a town was not liable for injuries due to the obstruction of a stream by a surveyor of highways who was not the agent of the town.—Ball v. Winchester, supra

Act not within governmental duties

A town which directs the performance of an act in respect of drainage which is not within the scope of imposed governmental duties becomes liable, like any other wrongdoer, for the resulting injury.—Rudnyai v. Harwinton, 63 A. 948, 79 Conn. 91

Matters not constituting nuisance

(1) Failure of county official to keep open ditches along highway, causing water to concentrate on adjacent land, constituted omission of duty, not maintenance of nuisance, and county was not liable.—Fryar v. Hamilton County, 22 S.W.2d 353, 160 Tenn. 216

(2) A county was not liable for damages to crops resulting from diversion of waters from usual course by negligent construction or maintenance of highway and bridge on theory that county was liable for "nuisance" created by it to special injury of citizen where alleged omission of county was mere negligent conduct incident to, and in direct course of, performance of statutory duty and was not an act separate from duty of constructing and maintaining highways and bridges.—Vesely v. Charles Mix County, 287 N.W. 51, 66 S.D. 570

53. R.I.—Stillman v. Pendleton, 60 A. 234, 26 R.I. 585

54 In Georgia

(1) The right of a landowner to recover damages from a county in a suit based on allegations of the creation and maintenance of a nuisance by reason of changes in a highway with resultant diversion of flow of water from its normal course and ultimately onto plaintiff's land, has been denied.—Floyd County v. Fincher, 150 S.E. 577, 169 Ga. 460

(2) In an earlier case, however, the right to recover from the county in an action for damages resulting from the maintenance of a nuisance apparently was recognized.—Nalley v. Carroll County, 70 S.E. 788, 135 Ga. 825.

drainage facilities connected therewith.[55] According to the construction given some statutes imposing liability for injuries resulting from defects in highways, the political subdivision specified may be liable for injuries to abutting or adjacent land caused by flooding or overflowing due to defective drainage facilities,[56] but some statutes providing for liability for injuries resulting from defects in, or want of repair of, highways refer only to injuries sustained in the use of a highway as such and do not include injuries to abutting land caused by flooding or overflowing.[57]

There can be no recovery from a political subdivision where the injuries complained of were not caused by any act or omission of such subdivision for which it is liable in damages,[58] or where its acts are not the cause of such injury.[59]

The liability of political subdivisions for injuries from defects in highways generally is discussed infra § 250, and the liability in tort of municipal corporations with respect to water courses and surface water in the C.J.S. title Municipal Corporations §§ 882, 883, also 43 C J. p 1140 note 44–p 1147 note 33; and the flooding of land and interference with drainage as ground for compensation as for property taken or injured under the power of eminent domain generally in Eminent Domain § 117.

Interference with right of access In the absence of statute to the contrary, highway authorities may make ditches along the highway which may render less convenient access or passage between the highway and abutting property,[60] but, by virtue of some statutes, highway authorities may not make ditches in such manner as unnecessarily to interfere with such access or passage.[61]

The right of access of an abutting owner as between the highway and his land in general is discussed supra § 141

(1) In view of Comp St 1922 § 2747, Comp St 1929 § 39–833, where a county raised the grade of a highway under its control at a place where it crossed the flood channel of a natural stream, without providing a bridge, culvert, or spillway for the natural drainage across the highway, the county was liable for the damages resulting from the accumulation of water due to such construction—Clark v Cedar County, 225 N W. 235, 118 Neb 465

(2) In such case, in order to permit the county to avoid liability on the theory that the injuries complained of were caused by an act of God, in that a rainfall or flood which occurred was so great that the county was not required to make provision therefor, it must appear that the flood was so extraordinary and unprecedented that it could not have been anticipated, liability cannot be avoided on the theory that the county was not required to provide against an extraordinary rainfall or flood—Clark v Cedar County, supra

(1) It has been held that the defect contemplated by the provision of Highway L § 74, now § 215, that every town shall be liable for damages sustained to person or property by reason of any defects in highways, existing because of the neglect of any town superintendent, is not merely a defect which interferes with travel along the highway, and that the statute imposes liability for damages resulting from overflowing of adjacent lands because of a defective or inadequate culvert constructed by town authorities—Bowman v Chenango, 125 N E 809, 227 N Y 459, reversing 171 N Y S 1079, 184 App Div 472 affirming 168 N Y S 1030—Dye v Cherry Creek, 149 N Y S 497, 87 Misc 207, affirmed 152 N Y S 1108, 167 App Div 959—29 C J p 591 note 3

(2) In an earlier case, however, the view was taken that the statute refers to the defects affecting the condition of the highway for public travel and that it does not impose liability on the town for injuries to land caused by overflowing due to an inadequate culvert carrying a stream through a highway—Barber v New Scotland, 34 N Y S 968, 88 Hun 522

(3) In another case, in which the view was expressed that the statute was intended to cover only a liability which resulted from defects interfering with travel along a highway, it was held that a town was not liable for damages caused by backing up of water due to failure of commissioner of highways to keep open a sluiceway—Winchell v Camillus, 95 N Y S 688, 109 App Div 341, affirmed 83 N E 1134, 190 N Y 536

(4) Liability of a town was denied under an earlier form of the statute in an action to recover damages sustained as a result of repairing a highway in such a manner as to throw water on plaintiff's land—Acker v Town of New Castle, 1 N Y S 223, 48 Hun 312, appeal dismissed 23 N E 1145, 119 N Y 631.

struction of drainage facilities connected with a highway may be liable to the owner of abutting property which is damaged by reason of such negligence,[62] and a private corporation which, on refusal of county authorities to grade and improve a highway, undertakes to do the work at its own expense may be liable to such an owner for injuries resulting from inadequate drainage facilities[63]

Whether one who, under authorization of public authorities, constructs a highway across the natural course of surface water is liable for damages on adjacent land due to the insufficiency of a drain to carry off water from an unprecedented rainfall depends on whether the drain was reasonably sufficient with respect to rainfalls which should have been anticipated[64]

As a general rule a person who works on a highway under the direction of a highway official is not liable for injuries to land resulting from acts or omissions affecting drainage, in the absence of any tort with which such person is chargeable individually[65]

b. Scope of Power and Duty as to Surface Water and Drainage over Abutting or Adjacent Land in General

Subject to certain limitations, highway authorities may drain surface waters from highways and onto abutting or adjacent land, and, under some statutes, may construct drains on such land; but as a general rule they may not, by artificial means, divert water, collect it in a body, and cast it onto such land

In some jurisdictions certain political subdivisions or highway authorities have the same rights and obligations with respect to the drainage of surface water from highways as an individual has with respect to his land[66] Under the rule in some jurisdictions it is the right and duty of highway authorities so to improve or maintain a highway that surface waters will flow in the natural course of drainage,[67] but in other jurisdictions the installation and maintenance of a drainage ditch in a course other than the natural course of drainage is not necessarily beyond the power of drainage authorities.[68]

In general highway authorities may drain, or permit the drainage of, surface water in its natural course from a highway onto abutting land,[69] and

65. Person in charge of crew

A person who was acting under the general direction of a representative of the state highway department and who was in charge of a crew of men engaged in repairing and improving a public way, which resulted in an increased flow of surface waters onto abutting property, was not liable to the owner of such property in an action on the case for tort, in the absence of any proof that defendant acted maliciously or negligently or in a manner otherwise unreasonable or improper, since defendant acted under competent public authority —Boober v Towne, 143 A 176, 127 Me 332

Person required to work on highway

A person who is required to work on a highway and who works under the direction of a road supervisor is not liable, in the absence of trespass, for an injury to land occasioned by surface water improperly deflected from its natural course by reason of highway improvements made by such supervisor —Mulvihill v Thompson, 87 N W 693, 114 Iowa 734

Protection of servient estate

The maintenance of ditches in a highway by the public for its protection, through which a portion of the surface water accumulating in the highway was carried away, does not entitle an adjoining landowner to have the ditches enlarged and so in some jurisdictions acts which cause surface water to flow more freely over abutting or adjacent land are not necessarily beyond the power of highway authorities.[70] In some jurisdictions they may reasonably divert surface water from its natural course and onto abutting land,[71] but in other jurisdictions they may not in general make such diversion of surface waters onto abutting land.[72] As a general rule highway authorities may not, in an artificial manner, divert water, collect it in a body, and cast it on abutting or adjacent premises,[73] and a like rule applies, according to some cases, where the water is diverted from its natural course and cast on certain land the topography of which is such that the water will inevitably flow onto other land so as to injure such other land.[74] Some statutes require the construction and maintenance of drainage facilities sufficient to permit the unobstructed flow of surface water which may reasonably be expected, if a highway is constructed or maintained which obstructs the natural flow of such water.[75]

constructed and maintained as fully to protect his land from overflow, or to change the natural course of drainage.—Pate v. Rogers, 187 N.W. 451, 193 Iowa 726.

Returning surface water to its natural course

(1) Notwithstanding a system of drainage, which had diverted surface water from its natural course, had been established and had existed for more than ten years, highway authorities were entitled to make such changes as would cause it to resume its natural course, where no rights under contract were involved and the facts were not such as to constitute an estoppel against the highway authorities. Statute of limitations could not be invoked by an abutting owner to prevent the change.—Schwartz v. Wapello County, 227 N.W. 91, 208 Iowa 1229.

(2) Highway authorities were entitled to make such constructions as would cause surface water to flow in the natural direction onto lower abutting land, notwithstanding for a number of years the water had run in a different direction through a channel worn by the water, as a result of the obstruction of a sluice by the elements.—Tower v. Somerset Tp., 106 N.W. 874, 143 Mich. 195.

(3) Town repairing road, washed out by storm, was not bound to maintain artificial bank on side thereof, although such bank prevented surface water from spreading onto adjacent land.—Klein v. Town of Pittstown, 272 N.Y.S. 324, 241 App.Div. 202.

Liability of town for damages

Where the natural course of drainage of surface water from a highway was toward plaintiff's premises and the highway authorities, in the exercise of discretion, had adopted a method of drainage, the township was not liable to plaintiff in damages merely because water flowed over his premises when floods were strong, in the absence of proof that there was an abuse of discretion on the part of the highway authorities.—De Noble v. Wilkins Tp., 74 Pa.Super. 389.

(2) Commissioners of highways may collect surface water and discharge it into a natural watercourse although the flow of water over the servient estate is increased.—Preemption Highway Comrs. v. Whitsitt, 15 Ill.App. 318.

Permitting drainage from higher land

c. Power, Duty, and Liability of State and State Highway Authorities

The state or state highway authorities may make proper provision for the drainage of state highways, liability of the state or of a state highway commission for acts or omissions as to drainage depends on constitutional or statutory provision.

The state or state highway authorities, in constructing and maintaining highways, may establish or construct facilities for drainage,[86] subject, however, to limitations in this regard in a deed conveying a right of way for a state highway [87]

In view of the rule that the state, by reason of its sovereignty, may not be sued without its consent, considered generally in the C J S title States § 214, also 59 C J p 300 note 31 et seq, in the absence of such consent, an action to recover damages to land abutting on, or adjacent to, a highway under the direct control of the state, resulting from acts or omissions affecting drainage, will not lie against the state [88] Some statutes, however, provide for the liability of the state with respect to such damages, under certain circumstances,[89] but the state is liable only for such acts or omissions as are within the purview of the statutes [90]

(1) State is not liable for damages resulting from surface defect in state highway sustained outside maintenance period specified in Highway L § 58, formerly § 176—Logan v State, 296 N Y S 639, 162 Misc 793, affirmed 5 N Y S 2d 908, 254 App Div 410

(2) Court of Claims Act § 12-a, waiving state's immunity from liability for its officers' and employees' torts did not repeal provision of Highway L § 176, now § 58, absolving state from liability for damages from defect in state highway outside designated maintenance period —Logan v. State, 296 N.Y.S. 639, 162

highway commission for damages to land resulting from negligence in the construction of drainage facilities connected with a state highway has been denied because of the absence of a statute imposing liability on the commission for the negligence of its officers and agents,[91] or because of the absence of a statute authorizing actions against the commission in its official capacity.[92] In some jurisdictions, however, in view of a statutory provision making the state highway commission a body corporate which may sue and be sued, such commission is liable in a proper case for damages for the flooding of lands by blocking adequate drainage facilities without making provision for adequate alternative drainage,[93] but in general the commission is not liable where it is not guilty of any negligence in constructing or improving the highway and the flooding is due to natural causes.[94]

State highway authorities have the right generally to claim the benefit of the civil law rule, considered generally in the C.J.S. title Waters § 114, also 67 C.J. p. 864 note 45, giving an upper proprietor of rural land the right to have surface water flow in its natural course over lower land in jurisdictions in which such rule has been adopted,[95] subject, however, to the further rule requiring reasonable use of the right for the purpose of avoiding undue hardship on the lower proprietor.[96] In some jurisdictions the state may construct and maintain such facilities as will prevent the flowing of sur-

(3) Where state in constructing highway between claimant's property and river, which customarily overflowed its banks at flood season, placed culverts under highway at location of an existing flood channel, and thereafter culverts were dammed up but dam was washed out by first flood, there was no negligence on part of state, for which claimant could recover for flood damage, based either on construction of culverts or on leaving culverts open after dam failed to hold.—Farrar v. State, 29 N.Y.S.2d 490, 176 Misc. 989.

(4) Where a culvert built by the state under a highway to carry a stream was larger than the county culvert which it replaced, and a violent storm caused débris to accumulate in it, and on the following day, while state employees were cleaning out the débris, there occurred one of the worst storms and floods that had occurred in that vicinity in many years, the water reaching a depth across the highway of about ten feet, the state was not liable for damage to claimant's land caused by the water.—Wood v. State, 202 N.Y.S. 340, 122 Misc. 860.

93 In Louisiana.

(1) The right to recover damages in an action against the commission has been upheld against the objection that the injury complained of resulted from an alleged tort of the commission's agents while engaged in the discharge of a governmental function, and the objection that the action was actually against the state, in a case in which the state had not consented to be sued. In support of the right to recover, the court cited the provision of Const. art. 1 § 2, that private property shall not be taken or damaged except for a public purpose and after just and adequate compensation is paid.—Murff v. Louisiana Highway Commission, 140 So. 863, 19 La.App. 847.

(2) In the supreme court the liability of the state highway commission in a proper case has been recognized in a case in which such constitutional provision was not cited and in which it was stated that the suit was predicated on Rev.Civ.Code art. 2315, which gives a right of action for damages caused by negligence and carelessness.—Schwartzenburg v. Louisiana Highway Commission, 168 So. 125, 184 La. 989.

(3) The right to recover includes damages to crops on flooded lands.—Schwartzenburg v. Louisiana Highway Commission, supra.—Murff v. Louisiana Highway Commission, App. 146 So. 328, rehearing denied 146 So. 767.—Murff v. Louisiana Highway Commission, 140 So. 863, 19 La.App. 847.

(4) State highway commission was liable for damages from destruction of crops on land overflowed because of inadequate culverts installed in constructing highway, in lieu of adequate facilities formerly existing.—Grounds v. Louisiana Highway Commission, 157 So. 385, 180 La. 670.—Connolly v. Louisiana Highway Commission 147 So. 505, 177 La. 78, followed in Grounds v. Louisiana Highway Commission, 147 So. 506, 177 La. 83.

94. La.—Schwartzenburg v. Louisiana Highway Commission, 168 So. 125, 184 La. 989.

95. Md.—Whitman v. Forney, 31 A.2d 630.

In Louisiana, state highway commission was not liable for damages from flooding lands alleged to have been caused by commission's destruction of adequate drains and installing inadequate ones, in improving a highway, where it was shown that the flooded land was lowland serving as a natural reservoir for water coming from other lands and that there were unusually heavy rainfalls during the period in question.—Schwartzenburg v. Louisiana Highway Commission, 168 So. 125, 184 La. 989.

96 Md.—Whitman v. Forney, 31 A.2d 630.

Method of drainage over lower land

(1) Where state roads commission had impliedly consented to filling of open ditch with a pipe carrying off surface water from a state road, and to the construction of part of a house over the pipe, commission was not entitled to have the ditch open and was held to have consented to the pipe method for diverting the water, nor would it be proper to compel a lower proprietor to permit the flow of surface water into the pipe and ditch across his land and to restore the pipe to its original condition, where to compel such action would result in recreating a hazard to health condemned by the county health officer.—Whitman v. Forney, supra.

(2) Where, in such case, the pipe was broken under the house of the lower proprietor, the state roads commission was not entitled to compel such proprietor to maintain the pipe line at his own expense, but it was entitled to go on his land for the purpose of repairing and keeping in repair the pipe and ditch and to have the drain reopened after proper repairs were made.—Whitman v. Forney, supra.

(3) In such case, the court cannot make an agreement for, nor compel an agreement by, the parties, by which the line might be relocated so as not to interfere with defendants' cellar, but the court was required under the rule of reasonableness of use to take the case made by the record and to determine what was fair and reasonable to be done, in view of the circumstances and the rights of the parties.—Whitman v. Forney, supra.

face waters onto the highway from higher abutting land, without rendering itself liable for resultant damages to such land[97] It has been announced as a general rule in some jurisdictions, however, that the state highway commission has no right to make any change in the construction or reconstruction of a road which will divert water from its natural course and cast it on adjacent lands[98]

d. Landowner's Right to Drain into Highway and to Obstruct or Interfere with Drainage

The right of the owner of abutting land to drain from his land into a highway is recognized, but it is not unlimited In some jurisdictions, he may erect on his land barriers to surface water flowing from the highway, but in other jurisdictions, he may not bar the natural flow of such water, and in general a landowner may not obstruct an artificial ditch lawfully constructed

The right of the owner of land abutting on a highway to drain the water from such land into the highway in a reasonable manner, if the public convenience is not interfered with, has been recognized[99] In general, however, he may not collect water in a ditch and cast it onto the highway in volume exceeding the natural drainage, to the detriment of the highway;[1] nor, in some jurisdictions at least, is he entitled to conduct water by drains or channels constructed on his own land and thereby cause it to flow onto a highway at a place other than that to which it naturally would flow[2]

In some jurisdictions the owner of land abutting on a highway in general may take necessary measures to protect his lands from surface water flowing from the highway by erecting barriers or obstructions on his own land,[3] but in other jurisdictions, the owner of land onto which water naturally flows from a highway may not in general obstruct such flow and cast the water back onto the highway[4]

A landowner has no right to obstruct an artificial drain or culvert lawfully constructed,[5] nor may he place within the lines of a highway an obstruction to a stream over which the highway passes, to the detriment of the use of the highway[6]

An overseer of highways has no right to relieve his own premises of drainage water at the expense of the public by filling up an artificial channel on his own land and extending an artificial channel along a highway so as to injure the highway[7]

In New York

(1) It has been stated broadly that the state is not liable for an increased flow of surface waters due to improvement of its highways and culverts, so long as the flow of water has not been diverted from its natural course—McCormick v State, 31 N Y S 2d 362 263 App Div 791 reversed on other grounds 43 N E 2d 715 289 N Y 572

(2) Where damage to crops was caused by surface water which backed up on claimant's land because of inadequate culvert which was not rebuilt or altered in eliminating a railroad grade crossing, it was held that the state was not liable in damages—Ortalano v State, 268 N Y S 366, 150 Misc 111

(3) It has been held that state which maintained sluiceway along highway to carry off surface waters which drained into adjacent land was not liable to landowner for flooding when sluiceway plugged up—Bull v State, 247 N Y S 183, 231 App Div 313

(4) In a case in the court of appeals, however, in which apparently surface water was involved the state was held liable on a claim for damages sustained by negligent flooding of claimant's land, where water was diverted from its natural course by a slight change in the angle of a culvert and the grade of the floor of the culvert was greater than in the case of an old bridge—McCormick v State 43 N E 2d 715 289 N Y 572, reversing 31 N Y S 2d 362, 263 App Div 791

Removal of débris

In view of recognition by county authorities of a landowner's use of bridge in highway over a stream, in connection with a barrier erected by him in the stream within the lines of the highway, he could not be required to remove débris which lodged against bridge as a result of the erection of the barrier—Adams County v Rider, supra

7. N Y—Kellogg v. Thompson, 66 N Y 88.

In general a landowner has no right to change the method of drainage along a highway on which his land abuts [8]

Abatement of drainage nuisance by landowner is considered infra § 188 Rights of abutting owner with respect to highways in general are considered supra §§ 141–143

e. Nature, Measure, and Amount of Damages

In an action to recover for injury to land from flooding or overflowing due to the drainage of a highway, plaintiff may recover nominal damages if his rights have been invaded, where there is no proof of special damages, general rules as to the measure and amount of damages apply in such an action

In the absence of proof of special damages, plaintiff who shows an invasion of his rights by the flooding or overflowing of his lands, as the result of the drainage of a highway, is entitled to recover nominal damages [9]

General rules, stated in Damages §§ 84, 85, as to the measure and amount of damages for injury to real property, apply in actions to recover for injury to such property resulting from flooding or overflowing due to acts or omissions with respect to drainage facilities for highways [10]

f. Actions

Before bringing an action to recover for injury to land due to alleged acts or omissions as to the drainage of a highway, there must be due compliance with any applicable statute requiring notice or presentation of a claim as a condition precedent Rules as to pleading, evidence, and trial, applicable in civil actions generally, apply in such an action

There must be due compliance with a statutory requirement for presenting or giving notice of a claim before bringing an action against a public entity for damages for injury to real property resulting from acts or omissions with respect to drainage of a highway [11]

Pleading and proof In an action against a public entity to recover damages for injury to land abutting on, or adjacent to, a highway from flooding or overflowing, the complaint or petition must allege facts which constitute a cause of action [12]

10. Permanent injury to real property
Where in an action against county for damages for permanent injury to farm land by diversion of flood waters as result of construction of drainage ditch, uncontroverted evidence showed damage to fruit trees and grape vines, that item was required to be included in damage to land on which trees and vines were growing in order to avoid double recovery —El Paso County v Elam, Tex Civ App, 106 S W 2d 393

Destruction of, or injury to, growing crops
(1) The general rule has been announced that the value of crop when destroyed by water, impounded on grower's lands because of inadequate drainage facilities through highway constructed by state highway commission, was the measure of damages recoverable from commission —Murff v Louisiana Highway Commission, La App, 157 So 134—Murff v Louisiana Highway Commission, La App 146 So 328, rehearing denied 146 So 767

(2) Where in such case crops destroyed were so immature as to have no market value and season was too far advanced to permit replanting, cultivating, and maturing of crops usually raised on the land, the measure of damages is the rental or usable value of the land -Grounds v Louisiana Highway Commission 157 So 385 180 La 670

(3) Where in such case the crop produced was far below normal in quantity and it was too late in the season to replant and mature the crop the measure of damages adopted was the total amount of expense incurred in preparing and planting the entire acreage together with the cost of the seed, less the price received for the crop actually produced to which was added the rental value of that part of the land on which the growing crop was totally destroyed, the extent in acreage of such part being fixed on the average, normal production per acre —Grounds v Louisiana Highway Commission, supra

(4) The general rule has been announced however, that, where a crop is merely damaged, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the crop before and after the injury at the time and place thereof, with interest from the date of the injury —Murff v Louisiana Highway Commission, La App, 146 So 328 rehearing denied 146 So 767

11. In New York an action against a town to recover damages for injury to plaintiff's crops because of negligence in failing to keep a highway ditch open could not be maintained under Highway L § 71, now § 215, where notice of claim required by the statute had not been given, the court did not express an opinion as to whether the action could have been maintained under such statute if the notice had been given —Brothers v Town of Leon, 189 N Y S 590, 198 App Div 114

In Texas in a case in which a cause of action, under Rev St 1911 art 6935, Rev St 1925 art 6730, against a county for damages resulting from the overflowing of land, due to the construction of a highway ditch, was stated in the petition the view was expressed that there was a sufficient presentation of the claim under Rev St 1911 art 1366, Rev St 1925 art 1573, where although no written claim had been presented plaintiff had presented his claim orally and in person to the commissioners' court --Southern Surety Co v McGuire, Civ App, 275 S W 845

12 In Texas
(1) In an action to recover from a county under Rev St 1925 art 6735, Rev St 1911 art 6935, damages for injury to land resulting from overflow of surface water from a highway, petition was sufficient as against general demurrer, notwithstanding it did not allege that the grading of the road was done by the road overseer or by order of the commissioners' court —Jones County v Moore, Civ App, 4 S W 2d 289, error refused

(2) In such case allegation of negligence of county officers in diverting water flow across highway was unnecessary and surplusage —Jones County v Moore, supra

(3) In such case allegations as to how diversion of water was effected were held sufficiently specific —Jones County v Moore, supra

(4) In such case petition was not so insufficient as to leave it uncertain

In such an action, defendant may allege matters which constitute a defense [13]

In general plaintiff may not introduce, in support of his case, evidence of matters which he has not alleged in his pleading [14]

Evidence. In an action against a public entity to recover for injury to land abutting on, or adjacent to, a highway resulting from flooding or overflowing, plaintiff has the burden of proving the essentials of a cause of action,[15] and defendant has the burden of proving facts constituting a defense [16]

In such actions, questions as to the sufficiency of evidence are determinable on the consideration of the evidence involved in the particular case [17]

Trial. Rules as to instructions to jury in civil

Pleading held insufficient

In action against county for damage for injury to crops on land adjacent to highway, complaint alleging that damage was caused by surface waters accumulated and backed up on lands because of defendant's negligence in construction of grade and in construction and maintenance of bridge was demurrable—Vesely v Charles Mix County, 287 N W 51, 66 S D 570

15. Claim against state

Claimant had the burden of showing that injury to his lands adjacent to a state highway, resulting from the flooding of such land, was due to the negligence of the state's employees, in order to recover damages from the state for such injury—Farrar v State, 29 N Y S 2d 490, 176 Misc 989

Burden of proof in civil actions generally see Evidence §§ 103–113

16 Unusual weather conditions

County which diverted waters from their natural course so that they would inevitably flow on property of landowners had burden of showing that damage to landowners after unusual snowfall and sudden thaw and heavy rain considered as acts of God, was caused solely by such acts of God and was wholly unaffected by waters which came from territory from which county had diverted water - Tope v King County, 65 P 2d 1283, 189 Wash 463

17. Evidence held sufficient

(1) To support finding that water was diverted by culvert so as to render state liable for the flooding of land—McCormick v State 43 N E 2d 715, 289 N Y 572 reversing 31 N Y S 2d 362, 263 App Div 791

(2) To sustain findings that culvert under state highway was inadequate that state had provided no adequate drainage elsewhere, and that such defect in highway was sole cause of flooding of land—Wallace Pond Ice Co v State, Claim No 18709, 19 N Y S 690, 259 App Div 938

(3) To show that overflow of plaintiff's land was due to blocking and reducing of drainage outlets by remodeling of highway by state highway commission—Grounds v Louisiana Highway Commission, 157 So 385, 180 La 670—Murfi v Louisiana Highway Commission, La App, 146 So 328, rehearing denied 146 So 767

(4) To show negligence of defendant town with respect to maintenance of culvert—Burnham v Windham, 88 A 701, 77 N H 103.

(5) To sustain finding that rainfall at time of inundation of claimant's land by water from a drain connected with a state highway was unusually heavy—Mead v State, 189 N Y S 516 197 App Div 739

(6) To show that flooding of land was due to fact that it was lowland serving as natural reservoir for water from other lands and that there were unusually heavy rainfalls during the period involved, in case in which it was sought to recover damages from state highway commission—Schwartzenburg v Louisiana Highway Commission, 168 So 125, 184 La 989

Evidence held insufficient

(1) To authorize recovery from county on ground that the reconstruction of highway resulted in improper diversion of surface water onto abutting land—Abkarian v Niagara County, 289 N Y S 968, 159 Misc 895

(2) To show negligence on the part of the state in constructing a culvert connected with a state highway or in failing to anticipate that the culvert would prove inadequate—Mead v State, 189 N Y S 516, 197 App Div 739

(3) To show an abuse of discretion by highway authorities of a township in determining the size and form of ditches along highway—De Noble v Wilkins Tp, 74 Pa Super 389

(4) To show in an action against a county, which diverted waters from their natural course and cast them on lands whose topography was such as to make other land their inevitable recipient, that damage to such other land after unusual snowfall, a sudden thaw, and heavy rain, which could be considered as acts of God, was not caused by waters which were diverted by county—Tope v King County, 65 P 2d 1283, 189 Wash 463

Damages

Plaintiff's uncontradicted testimony, supported by itemized expense account, to which he testified, and evidence of rental value of land, mules, and farming implements, were sufficient to show that cotton crop was worth amount to which he testified when destroyed by water impounded on his lands because of inadequate drainage allowances actions generally, considered in the C.J.S. title Trial §§ 266–448, also 64 C J. p 510 note 3–p 1008 notes 15–19, apply in actions to recover for injuries to land resulting from flooding or overflowing, due to acts or omissions with respect to drainage affecting a highway [18]

In such action, the rule applicable in civil actions generally, that questions of fact are for the jury, stated in the C J S title Trial § 203, also 64 C J p 298 note 55, or for the court when it is the trier of the facts, stated in the C J S. title Trial § 574, also 64 C J p 1189 notes 64, 65, applies [19]

In such an action, rules as to special findings by the jury in civil actions generally, considered in the C J S title Trial §§ 526–573, also 64 C J p 1112 note 21–p 1189 note 61, apply [20]

§ 187. —— Personal Liability of Officer

Subject to limitations obtaining in some jurisdictions, highway officials may be liable personally for negligence in the performance of their duties with respect to drainage; they are also liable for malicious or corrupt acts, or for acting without authority or in bad faith, with regard to the construction or maintenance of drains.

Highway officials may be liable personally for negligence in the performance of their duties with respect to the drainage of highways,[21] but, according to some cases, they are not liable for the consequences of nonfeasance as to drainage in connection with their duty to supervise highways, in the absence of willful misconduct or facts from which misconduct may be imputed,[22] and, even with re-

through highway constructed by defendant state highway commission—Murff v Louisiana Highway Commission La App, 157 So 134

Weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions generally see Evidence §§ 1016–1050

18. Instruction as to sufficiency of drainage facilities

(1) In an action against a private corporation which constructed a road under authorization of public authorities, in which liability depended on inadequacy of drainage facilities from adjacent lands, an instruction should have been given to the effect that defendant was not liable for damages resulting from an unprecedented rainfall, if defendant made reasonable provision for the escape of waters from such floods as were known to occur in the vicinity—Van Wilgen v Payne Inv Co, 223 N W 301 176 Minn 349

(2) Instruction was held erroneous with respect to conditions for which county must provide in constructing highway—Clark v Cedar County, 225 N W 235, 118 Neb 465

(3) Instruction was held correct as to conditions for which county must provide in constructing and maintaining drainage facilities—Thurs Box Co v Marathon County, 289 N W 691, 233 Wis 387

19. Questions held for jury or trier of facts

(1) Whether a flood which inundated land abutting on, or near, a highway was of such a character that it should have been anticipated and provided for is a question for the jury or trier of the facts—Mead v State, 189 N Y S 516, 197 App Div 739

(2) In action against county for injuries caused by flooding land as result of highway washout, negligence of county in maintenance of highway was for jury to decide under the evidence—Bush v King County, 236 P 298, 134 Wash 626

(3) In an action against a county for damages to plaintiffs' crops, caused by impairment of drainage by the county and its agents in the improvement of a road, in which the county alleged that the damage was occasioned by the acts of a navigation district in disposing of the spoil from its dredging operations and in which there was evidence to support such allegation, the issue should have been submitted to the jury on the county's request therefor—Gerhart v Harris County, Civ App 244 S W 1103 affirmed Harris County v Gerhart, 283 S W 139, 115 Tex 449

(4) Evidence held sufficient to authorize submission to jury of issue as to whether land was damaged by flooding—El Paso County v Elam, Tex Civ App, 106 S W 2d 393

(5) Where plaintiff's petition showed that he sought to recover damages for permanent injury to his land and there was some evidence tending to show that injury was temporary rather than permanent, there should have been submitted to the jury the question whether the value of the land had been impaired permanently—El Paso County v Elam, supra

(6) In action against county for damages for permanent injury to farm land by diversion of flood waters as result of construction of drainage ditch, whether damages were proximate result of permanent and continuing character of ditch, or its maintenance, as constituting permanent injury to reasonable market value of land, was a question for jury—El Paso County v Elam, supra

(7) In such action, whether construction or maintenance of state highway proximately caused, or contributed to cause, waters to back on and cause damage to part of land and especially to growing crops thereon was a question for jury—El Paso County v Elam, supra

20. Necessity for finding of permanent injury to land

Where plaintiff's petition shows that he seeks to recover damages for permanent injury to land, there must be a finding by the jury that such injury was sustained in order to permit a recovery of such damages—El Paso County v Elam supra

Findings not conflicting

In action against county for damages to land by diversion of flood waters as result of construction of drainage ditch to protect highways, jury's negative answer to question whether person of ordinary prudence in plaintiff's position would not, at time of construction, have foreseen that it would result in flooding land, and affirmative answer to question whether person of ordinary prudence could not have foreseen damage, if any, suffered by plaintiff, were not conflicting, since first question applied to plaintiff and second to ditch builder—El Paso County v Elam, supra

Failure to keep open ditches and drains

County officials, charged with the duty of supervising highways, were not liable for flood damage caused by failure to keep open ditches and drains along highway, where it did not appear that such failure was a willful neglect of duty, since it cannot be inferred from mere failure to exercise power that duty was will-spect to negligence as to merely ministerial duties in this regard, they are liable only for negligent failure to perform a positive duty imposed by law [23]

Such officials are liable for malicious[24] or corrupt[25] action, or for acting without authority[26] or in bad faith,[27] in constructing or maintaining drains, but not in general for damage caused by drainage established by them within their authority [28] They are not liable for injuries occasioned by inadvertence or error of judgment,[29] or for mere omission to perform an act the performance of which, although proper and necessary to prevent incidental injury, cannot be exacted as a legal right [30] Defendant officials are not liable for injuries which are not caused by their acts [31]

The right to recover damages from a highway official because of the construction of a ditch so as to interfere with plaintiff's access to his property, in violation of statute, has been denied on the ground that the statute itself provided an exclusive remedy.[32]

Successors of negligent commissioners are not liable for their predecessors' acts [33]

The burden of showing that defendant official did not act in good faith, but that he acted without reasonable care, corruptly, or maliciously is on plaintiff [34]

§ 188. —— Abatement of Drainage Nuisance

A landowner may under some circumstances abate, in a peaceable manner, a nuisance created in connection with the drainage of a highway.

If drainage upon adjacent land is in the nature of a nuisance, the landowner may have a right to cure the condition himself by peaceable abatement,[35] as by filling a ditch,[36] so as to throw surface water back onto the highway, and it has been held that, where the obstruction of an artificial watercourse across a highway creates a nuisance, a landowner who is entitled to have such watercourse maintained may remove the obstruction in a proper manner after the highway authorities, on due notice, have failed to act [37]

The right of an owner of land abutting on a highway as to surface water generally is discussed supra § 186

§ 189. —— Injunction

In a proper case an injunction may be granted to protect a landowner from injury from wrongful drainage of a highway, and a landowner may be prevented by injunction from wrongfully interfering with such drainage

Unless another and exclusive remedy is provided by statute,[38] injunction may be allowed to protect individual landowners from irreparable injury from wrongful drainage,[39] only, however, where the work fully neglected—Fryar v Hamilton County, supra.

Facility interfering with access

is clearly improper.[40] The courts ought not as a rule control by injunction the action of highway officials in deciding on the necessity of a change of drainage and the mode of doing it.[41]

In general an injunction will not be granted to prevent the flowing of surface water from a highway onto abutting or adjacent land,[42] or to prevent the establishment or maintenance of a drainage system which facilitates such flowing,[43] where the surface water naturally flows onto such land, and in some jurisdictions an injunction will not be granted merely because drainage facilities divert the natural flow of drainage water so as to turn it onto abutting or adjacent land.[44] The diversion of sur-

Want of compensation for injury

Evidence that landowner refused to sign a right of way deed for part of a reconstructed highway until the fiscal court agreed that a projected culvert which would divert water across landowner's land would be eliminated and the highway commissioner and the highway engineer agreed to recommend elimination thereof to the highway commission established that the cash consideration in the agreement was not intended to include damages resulting from placing the culvert at the point designated in the plat, as bearing on the right of landowner to an injunction to effect the elimination of the culvert.—Department of Highways v McKinney, 162 S.W.2d 179, 291 Ky. 1

Showing as to damage or injury held sufficient

Overruling of a motion to dissolve a temporary injunction, restraining highway ditching and culvert work on the ground of damage to plaintiff's adjoining land in that the work would change the natural flow of water on the land, was not error, as against defendant's contention that plaintiff had failed to show substantial damage.—Francis v. Galbreath, supra

No showing of substantial injury

Injunction has been denied because of lack of showing of substantial injury to plaintiff's land.—Hassinger v. Kramer, 162 N.E. 752, 28 Ohio App. 449

Modification of decree

Where a permanent injunction against the maintenance of certain drains was so modified as not to prevent the construction of a culvert, without fixing the size of the culvert, the size was within the discretion of the highway officials.—Ehler v. Stier, 216 N.W. 637, 205 Iowa 678

Evidence held sufficient

(1) To show that principal object of ditch was drainage of private lands and not roads, so that construction thereof was beyond authority of highway commissioner and grant of injunction was proper.—Dunn v. Meyer, 235 N.W. 254, 253 Mich. 563

(2) To show that proposed drainage facilities for highway would change the natural flow of water over land of plaintiff, with resultant damage to such land, so as to warrant denial of motion to dissolve temporary injunction.—Francis v. Galbreath, 278 Ill.App. 389

Evidence held insufficient to warrant injunction

Evidence that overflow of plaintiff's land was due to blocking and reducing of drainage outlets by remodeling of highway was not sufficiently definite to warrant mandatory injunction commanding highway commission to enlarge openings across highway.—Murff v. Louisiana Highway Commission, La.App., 146 So. 328, rehearing denied 146 So. 767

Existence of natural watercourse not shown

Plaintiff by turning surface water from its original course, and running it in an artificial channel to a highway, and thence through a ditch along the highway, and maintaining it for more than forty years, did not make the ditch a natural watercourse so as to entitle him to obtain an injunction to prevent the highway authorities from interfering therewith within the limits of the highway.—Worth v. Town of Salamanca, 130 N.Y.S. 449, 72 Misc. 513

Injury or threatened injury not shown

In a suit for injunction against threatened injury to a landowner from a ditch on a state highway, evidence showed that plaintiff was not only not injured, but was not in danger of any injury, by reason of the ditch placed therein, so that defendants were not required to take proceedings under Rev.Code 1919 §§ 8598–8604, to drain an adjoining basin from which plaintiff claimed water would flow through the ditch onto his land.—Schmidt v. Norbeck, 189 N.W. 524, 45 S.D. 557

Removal of débris

County could not be compelled to remove débris which lodged against a bridge over a stream because of barrier to stream wrongfully erected within the lines of the highway by the owner of abutting land.—Adams County v. Rider, 218 N.W. 60, 205 Iowa 137.

Evidence held sufficient

In suit for mandatory injunction to require town to fill drainage ditch, evidence supported finding that town adopted reasonable and proper method of draining highway, and that plaintiff's land was not appreciably injured.—Sandmeier v. Town of St. James, 205 N.W. 634, 165 Minn. 31

Diverting of water of pond

Where public authorities in constructing drains along the side of highways, necessary to render the road passable, divert the waters of a pond out of the natural course of drainage and upon the lands of one not consenting to the work, ordinarily they will not be enjoined if the work is done in good faith.—Lindberg v. Challburg, 194 N.W. 733, 110 Neb. 626.—Wachter v. Lange, 143 N.W. 207, 94 Neb. 290

Common-law or common-enemy rule as to surface waters on rural face water by the construction or maintenance of a highway or of drainage facilities has been regarded, however, as a ground for an injunction under some circumstances [45]

The right of a landowner to relief depends on his own injury, and not on his neighbor's advantage [46] Conversely, the highway commissioners cannot plead the rights of adjacent owners who are not parties nor asking relief [47]

In some jurisdictions, where the facts are in dispute, an injunction will not be granted until they are established by a jury [48]

In a proper case public authorities are entitled to an injunction against the maintenance, on abutting land, of an obstruction to the natural flow of surface water,[49] against the maintenance by an abutting owner of a dam in a ditch along the highway where such dam prevents such natural flow,[50] or against the maintenance of a barrier to a stream over which a highway passes, erected within the lines of the highway [51] A mandatory injunction requiring an owner of land abutting on a highway, who has, without authority, made a change in the mode of draining the highway in front of his premises, to restore the highway to its condition prior to the change has been denied on the ground that the change did not injure plaintiff and actually improved the condition of the highway [52]

The burden is on plaintiff to prove the allegations of his complaint [53]

(1) Evidence held to sustain finding that contemplated drainage system was different from natural drainage of highway, and would increase flow over adjoining property, so as to warrant grant of injunction—Ogden v Police Jury of East Baton Rouge Parish, 118 So 65, 166 La 869

(2) Where land of a dominant estate was separated by a highway from land of a servient estate, in an action by the dominant owner to enjoin the servient owner from obstructing the natural flow of surface water, and to compel highway authorities to maintain proper openings in the highway for escaping water, evidence was sufficient to warrant a decree enjoining the servient owner from diverting the natural flow and directing the highway authorities to maintain the highway so as not to divert water from its natural course—Pate v Rogers, 187 N W 451, 193 Iowa 726

§ 191. Lighting and Lighting Districts

The scope and extent of authority to provide for the artificial lighting of highways under statutory provisions depend on the terms of the particular statute

Under some statutes the county board of supervisors and the county highway authorities may make provision for the artificial lighting of county roads in congested and dangerous localities [59]

Some statutes authorizing township boards to provide for the artificial lighting of highways are applicable only to township highways[60] and do not include county highways [61]

§ 192. Proceedings for Improvement of Highways and for Construction of Free Gravel Roads or Turnpikes

(5) Signatures on petition for highway improvement, of two corpo-

struction or improvement proposed,[68] and containing all other matters required by the statute.[69] A provision of a road petition that the improvement shall be made according to plans approved by the secretary of agriculture, if federal aid is granted, makes such approval necessary for only that portion of the road which receives federal aid.[70]

Notice of the filing of the petition,[71] stating the character of the improvement asked for,[72] is also sometimes required, but in the absence of any such provision it is not necessary.[73]

Where a statute so requires, an itemized statement of the cost of the road is required to be made and filed with the county clerk,[74] with plans and specifications definitely and with certainty describing the nature and extent of the work to be done.[75] If the statute requires a detailed or itemized estimate of the cost, an estimate of the gross cost is not sufficient.[76]

More than one road

Where paving improvement is proposed there is no legal objection to including in the petition more than one road where the improvement contemplates one connected system or unit of paving—Brown Real Estate Co v Lancaster County, 188 N W 247, 108 Neb 511, followed in Loos v Lancaster County, 188 N E 253, 108 Neb 531

In Mississippi a petition, as provided for in Hemingway Code Suppl 1921 §§ 7158-7178c, does not provide any power in the electors to prescribe roads to be built or improved out of a bond issue petitioned for. The only authority the electors have is to petition for the law to be adopted and the bond issue to be voted and any extraneous or surplus matter therein is not binding on the supervisors—Board of Sup'rs of Quitman County v Self, 125 So 528, 156 Miss 273

lish, or construct any improvement except as petitioned for by a sufficient number of properly qualified freeholders [78] Under some statutes, however, in improving roads, they may be changed whenever necessary in order to avoid bluffs, hills, ravines, or other obstacles, for a distance of not more than one-half mile,[79] and under some statutes the board of county commissioners has power to review, change, and modify the plans for the proposed improvement on a public hearing after the report of the appraisers has been received [80] If part of the road described in the petition has already been improved so as to conform to the proposed work, the board may omit that part from the order and direct the balance of the road improved [81] Under some statutes, where the county commissioners have allowed a petition for the hard surfacing of a road over a definite route, making appropriate findings and orders, they cannot, on a new petition, make a substantial change in the route,[82] although, where authorized by statute to do so, before a contract for construction of the road has been made, the commissioners may order, under a subsequent proper petition therefor, a road built of different material on a location largely identical with that ordered in the first petition [83]

Reply or remonstrance. Pleadings in reply should be according to the statute [84] The grounds of objections by parties filing a remonstrance and motions in the proceedings must be set forth specifically, and not in general terms, or no question is presented [85] Errors cannot be taken advantage of by persons who are not injuriously affected thereby [86] The legislature may limit the right to protest by granting it only to owners of record [87] This limitation does not prevent all interested persons, including those not owners of record, from appearing before the board of supervisors and voicing their objections.[88]

The minority who do not sign the petition and who are bound by the proceedings instituted by the majority have the same right to insist that proceedings shall be in accordance with the petition as has any of the signers thereof.[89]

Resolution of intention Under some statutes empowering county boards of supervisors to order the construction or improvement of highways, the board is required to pass a resolution of intention to order such work to be done, and a resolution of intention in substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient [90]

§ 193. —— Submission of Question to Vote

Where a statute so requires, the question of improving roads must be submitted to a vote The election must be conducted in substantial compliance with the law

In the absence of a statute so requiring, the proposition of improving the roads need not be submitted to a vote of the landowners or voters [91] In some jurisdictions the question of improving roads must be submitted to the voters of the town or taxing district at a regular election, or at a special election called for that purpose [92] If the petition is

(2) Such statute is applicable to an improvement consisting of laterals annexed to original road, as it must be treated as a new project and the creation of a new district — Road Improvement Dist No 2 of Lonoke County v Shifflett, 273 S W. 1034, 169 Ark 179

(3) Statute held not to prohibit commissioners of road improvement district from graveling laterals — Swan v. Ozark Trail Road Improve-on its face regular and conforms to the statute, it is the duty of the clerk to call the election.[93]

Under some statutes the petitioners have the right to determine the kind of road on which they will ask for the vote[94] If they see fit, they may petition for a vote on levying a tax for gravel, rock, macadam, or other hard roads in the language of the statute, thus leaving the character of the road to be determined by the highway commissioners[95] On the other hand, they may petition for a vote on a particular kind of hard road, in which event the vote must be had on that proposition and cannot be extended to other kinds of roads[96] The improvement of more than one road in the district may be petitioned for and voted on as a unit[97]

The petition must contain the statements required by the statutes[98] and be signed by persons having the required qualifications[99] Where the statute so requires, it must contain a description of the road sufficient to inform the voters what road is to be improved[1] Unless the statute so requires, the fact that the signers possess the necessary qualifications is not required to be stated[2]

The order calling the election may describe the road to be improved so as to inform the voters of its location[3] Reasonable notice of the election must be given[4]

Unless so provided the election need not be by ballot[5] Where required, however, the ballot must be in the form prescribed by the statute,[6] and a failure to comply with the law in that respect renders an election void[7] A substantial compliance with the statute as to the form of the ballot is all that is required[8] A ballot in the form prescribed by the statute in force at the time of the election is sufficient,[9] and need not specify in detail the matters set forth in the petition[10] The notice and ballot should follow and agree with the petition,[11] and should not permit a vote on a different question,[12] but there is no objection to the generality of a ballot, if it directs the attention of the voter to the proposition on which he is to vote[13] The omission of the negative of the proposition to be voted on will invalidate the election[14]

The returns of the election should be canvassed by the persons designated in the statute, but disregard of such requirement is a mere irregularity,

not affecting the validity of the tax levied.[15] Under some statutes the canvass of the votes cast at the election must be submitted to the county board of commissioners, and it must find as to the result of the election.[16] The board is authorized to go behind the votes as returned by the election officers, and any person may appear before the board at the proper time, and present any proper objections to the result as returned.[17] Where the board finds the election to be invalid, it may order a valid election.[18] In some states provision is made for a formal contest of the election.[19]

The improvement ordered or contracted for by the court or county commissioners must, as a general rule, be that authorized by the election,[20] although, unless restricted by the order submitting the question to a vote, the court or board of commissioners has a wide discretion as to the location of the roads to be improved,[21] and the order of their improvement,[22] but they cannot substitute one type of road material for another expressly approved at the election.[23] Where the submission order follows the petition, the court will ascertain the purposes of the petition and require conformity to its order of construction.[24]

Resubmission Under some statutes, where the question of hard surfacing the road system of the county has been determined and the question of issuing bonds therefor has been favorably acted on by an election, there is no authority for calling another election to resubmit the question to the voters.[25]

§ 194. —— Commissioners or Viewers

Some statutes provide for the appointment of commissioners or viewers who are to make a report on the proposed highway.

Where the statutes provide for the appointment of commissioners or viewers, they must be appointed in accordance therewith,[26] and they must duly meet[27] and make a report[28] which forms the basis of further proceedings.[29]

Under some statutes to authorize the improvement it is necessary for the county commissioners to make an absolute and unconditional finding of its public utility.[30] Under some statutes, where the County commissioners' court's preelection orders, locating road proposed to be constructed, constitute contract between voters and court, controlled by general principles of law of contracts—Newman v Biggs, Tex Civ App., 68 S W 2d 632

Designation by highway number

The designation of a road by its highway number, where it is located on the ground, operated, and maintained by that number, is a sufficient description to require the commissioners' court in constructing the new road, to conform to the location of the old road—Newman v Biggs, supra

Immaterial changes

When the road to be improved is specifically designated on the ground by a particular description given in the election order, the commissioners' court must construct the road in substantial compliance with the location as thus designated and it has discretion to make only such changes as would not amount to a material or substantial change from the route designated—Newman v Biggs, supra

Where the board of commissioners is authorized by the result of the election to construct a system of roads as one road, it cannot contract for the construction of any one or more of the roads less than the whole—Wilson v Board of Com'rs of Warrick County, 137 N E 783, 79 Ind App 250

30. Finding on condition

Finding by county commissioners that road was of public utility on the condition that the road receive federal aid to specified extent was not rendered effective to authorize the viewers disagree on the public utility of the highway, the proper practice is to reject their report, and refer the petition back to them for another report,[31] unless it plainly appears that it is not possible for them to agree, in which case new viewers should be appointed.[32] If the desired improvement or construction is decided on, the commissioners or viewers should make an order[33] which must follow the petition.[34] Notice of the filing of the report or of the order is unnecessary unless specially required.[35] The order may be vacated for sufficient reasons.[36] A failure to file a remonstrance, as permitted by statute, to the viewer's report has been held to constitute acquiescence in the report.[37]

Disqualification The members of the highway board have been held to be subject to the rule disqualifying a judge from acting when directly interested in the litigation,[38] unless such irregularity is waived.[39] An exception to this rule has been held to exist where the disqualification would destroy the only legal tribunal for hearing the question in issue,[40] but such exception is not applicable except in cases of imperative necessity.[41]

It has been held that the fact that a county commissioner owns real estate within the assessable area for the improvement does not of itself disqualify him from acting in proceedings relative to laying out and making the road.[42]

§ 195. —— Hearing and Record

There must be substantial compliance as to a hearing and the records to be kept

The hearing on the petition must be in accordance with the statute,[43] and can be held only after the notice prescribed by statute has been given.[44] The right of all persons to a hearing is a valuable right and, where the cost of the improvement is charged against the property benefited, the persons who are to pay that cost cannot be denied their day in court.[45] Formal errors in the proceedings do not affect their regularity,[46] nor does delay in improvement, under statute requiring an absolute and unconditional finding of public utility, by the subsequent fulfillment of the condition when the federal aid asked was set aside without further action by the commissioners.—Herrmann v Larkin, 204 P 768, 110 Kan 607, overruling motion Herrmann v Larkin, 202 P 980, 110 Kan 168 acting on the petition,[47] without entering a formal continuance,[48] render the proceedings void.

Under some statutes it is the duty of the board of commissioners to determine whether the petition for the improvement contains the requisite number of qualified petitioners,[49] and whether a remonstrance is sufficient to stop all further proceedings.[50] In making this determination the board acts judicially.[51]

Under some statutes as a preliminary to the construction of proposed road improvements the county board must find them to be of public utility.[52]

Record In the absence of a statute to the contrary, it is not necessary that the record expressly show that the board made a finding of the facts necessary to give it jurisdiction over the subject matter, as it is sufficient that the board acted on the matter presented to it.[53] The record need not show that the improvement was necessary,[54] unless the statute so requires,[55] and the adoption of the order may be a sufficient statement of necessity.[56] The evidence of notice need not be spread on the record.[57] The mere failure of the county auditor at the proper time to perform the clerical act of copying a record made by the proper officer, when acting as clerk of a joint session of county boards, does not relieve him of a statutory duty to copy it into the record at some time.[58]

§ 196. —— Appeal and Certiorari

Where the statutes so provide, an appeal to some court may be taken from the decision of a highway board or officer as to the necessity and propriety of highway improvements

The necessity and propriety of the improvements, their kind, character, and extent, and the matter of their execution or construction are confided to such boards, officers, or agencies as the legislature has provided for that purpose, and, in the absence of any provision for the review of their action on appeal or otherwise, their findings and decision are final, and not subject to review, as long, at least, as they act in good faith and within the scope of the authority conferred on them.[59] However, the statutes usually expressly give to any person aggrieved by any decision of the board of commissioners a right of appeal therefrom to some court.[60]

52 Conditional finding

Where an entry reciting that it was found that the improvements asked are of public utility is made on the commissioners' journal and the improvements are ordered on condition that the road connect with others outside of the county and that federal aid should be received, this language is to be construed as attaching conditions to the findings as well as the order and such a conditional finding is insufficient to authorize the improvements.—Hermann v. Board having jurisdiction

If the board, having jurisdiction, makes an erroneous decision of a question that comes before it, or is guilty of an irregularity not justified by the facts, the remedy is by appeal to the circuit court.—State v. Board of Com'rs of Dubois County, 148 N.E. 198, 196 Ind. 271, denying rehearing 146 N.E. 852, 196 Ind. 271

Change in plans

Circuit court was not deprived of jurisdiction to consider highway improvement appeal, where change in the plans by highway commission's engineer, made after appeal, did not affect essential character.—Kelly v. Herbst, 170 N.E. 853, 202 Ind. 55

Plan abandoned

Where after an appeal has been taken the plans for the improvement are abandoned and new plans are filed and approved without objection, objections to the new plan cannot be raised on the appeal taken from the original plans.—McGehee v. Road Improvement Dist. No. 2 of Desha County, 242 S.W. 808, 154 Ark. 442

Record

That transcript on appeal from board of county commissioners did not contain plans for road improvements was no ground to dismiss proceedings in circuit court, such report having been sent to engineer of state highway commission as required by statute.—Kelly v. Herbst, 170 N.E. 853, 202 Ind. 55.

A remonstrator has a right to appeal,[61] and under some statutes such right is not confined to parties to the procedure,[62] but anyone not a party may show his interest by affidavit and have the appeal.[63] Such an appeal must be taken within the time limited by statute [64] On such an appeal a case is usually tried de novo,[65] and only such questions can be determined as were presented to the board of commissioners,[66] or as may, by leave of court, be put in issue by amended pleadings [67] Under some statutes the decision of the court on questions which it is authorized to review is conclusive and is not subject to review by appeal [68]

Certiorari. Matters relating to the jurisdiction of the road commission to act in ordering the improvement may be reviewed on certiorari,[69] but certiorari will not lie to review legislative acts of the county board [70] It has been held that a statute providing for review by certiorari must be strictly construed and that the remedy by which the proceedings may be attacked must be confined to certiorari [71] If petitioners are not parties interested in such a sense as to permit them to question the proceedings by direct appeal, it has been held that they have no such interest as to permit them to sue out a writ of certiorari to review such proceedings [72]

Proceedings by certiorari have been held not to be personal actions in which the prosecutor may insist on a personal right, he is rather to be regarded as amicus curiæ, and the court should determine the public rights he represents on grounds that substantially affect them, and not on sharp questions and verbal criticisms [73]

§ 197. —— Collateral Attack

The proceedings for improvement of highways, if not void, are not subject to collateral attack

The proceedings of boards of commissioners or viewers for the improvement of highways are presumed to be regular, in the absence of a contrary showing,[74] and cannot be collaterally attacked,[75] as by injunction,[76] unless they are absolutely void,[77] or fraud or its equivalent appears [78] Unless otherwise provided by statute,[79] the rule against collateral attack applies as well where there is no appeal or other remedy as where an appeal is allowable [80] Persons other than the owners of the land on which a public road runs are not entitled collaterally to attack an order assuming jurisdiction thereof [81]

§ 198. Compelling Construction, Improvement, or Repair and Remedies for Breach of Duty

Ordinarily the construction, improvement, or repair of highways is a matter of administrative discretion and cannot be compelled by legal proceedings

The necessity for the construction, improvement, or repair of highways, being an administrative matter, must be left largely to the judgment and discretion of the officers who are charged with the performance of the duty involved,[82] and, ordinarily, in the absence of fraud or its equivalent, their determination is final.[83] Various statutory proceedings, however, are provided for enforcing the construction and repair of roads,[84] and, where, after proper proceedings, an order for an improvement has become a finality, it is the duty, under some statutes, of the board of county commissioners to proceed without delay in making the improvement, and, on its refusal to do so, it may be compelled, by appropriate proceedings, to proceed.[85] An injunction compelling the construction of a highway should not be too broad or include matters which should not be compelled by injunction.[86]

§ 199. Restraining Construction, Improvement, or Repair

Illegal construction or improvement of highways may be enjoined

Courts will not, by restraining the construction, improvement, or repair of highways control the discretion of the proper highway authorities, except in so far as the action is shown to be capricious, unreasonable, oppressive, or unlawful.[87] On the other hand, construction or improvement in violation of, or noncompliance with, law may be restrained by injunction,[88] if the acts done, or threatened to be done, to the property would be ruinous or cause irreparable injury,[89] or, according to some decisions, although the injury is not irreparable, and defendant is not insolvent,[90] if the just enjoyment of the property in the future would be impaired.[91] Landowners have no right to interfere with the construction of a lawful improvement unless it affects some

Damages not proper remedy

When road, although no longer kept in repair, has not been discontinued, the remedy of one aggrieved is not by action for damages, but by mandamus to require its repair.—Shellnut v. Carroll County, 117 S.E. 333, 30 Ga. App. 200.

86. Route

Injunction mandatorily requiring highway commission to build road on designated route was too broad, as precluding commission from thereafter building road on different route if authorized by legislature.—State Highway Commission v. Mitchell, 44 S.W.2d 533, 241 Ky. 553.

personal or property right belonging to them or to some of them,[92] and injunction will not lie to prevent construction if the damage by reason thereof is merely consequential.[93] It has also been held that an injunction will not lie where the injury would be slight,[94] or where there is an adequate remedy at law[95] The usual defenses to an injunction are available[96] An injunction will be granted only on joining the proper parties[97] An injunction against county commissioners who have failed to comply with certain requirements of law, to restrain the opening of a road, cannot be final and perpetual, but only until they comply with such requirements[98]

Venue Where the state board of highway commissioners is not a corporate body, a proceeding to enjoin it from abandoning one road as a state-aid road and taking over another in lieu thereof is properly brought in the county in which one or more of the commissioners reside[99]

Time to sue The action must be commenced within the time limited after the making of the order directing the improvement[1] The right to oppose an improvement may also be lost by laches[2] In the absence of any evidence of an illegal act done or intended to be done, the action is prematurely commenced[3]

Pleading On proceedings to enjoin changes in the state highway, allegations that the proposed changes are substantial and are not being made in the interests of public safety must be considered in conjunction with allegations which give a description of the road and of the proposed changes in its location[4]

and, where a highway is located on the divisional line between two towns, one of the two towns may be indicted for failure to keep such highway in repair,[8] but they cannot be jointly indicted.[9] The same remedy is available against a private person or corporation charged with the duty of repair.[10]

A highway officer failing to work or repair a highway under his charge is frequently made subject to criminal liability[11] or to a statutory penalty.[12] While in some cases it is assumed apparently that there is such a criminal liability apart from special statute, on the ground that leaving a road in an improper condition constitutes a nuisance,[13] it is generally imposed by express statute,[14] and the liability of the officer is generally restricted to cases in which his neglect to repair is willful.[15] Where the officer has a discretion in the matter,[16] where the work was rendered impossible by facts not attributable to his fault,[17] or where the legislature has prescribed no penalty and fixed no punishment for neglect on the part of a road officer,[18] he is not liable to indictment. However long a road may have been out of repair before the indictment, it is but one offense, but if, after conviction, it still continues out of repair, the officer may again be indicted.[19]

Defenses Particular matters have been held not to be available as a defense in a prosecution for not building the highway after it has been laid out,[20] or for failure to repair.[21]

Indictment and information Offenses of this nature may usually be proceeded against either by indictment or information,[22] or, under some statutes, by presentment.[23] As in the case of other offenses, an indictment for maintaining a defective highway should be definite and certain in its averments,[24] and must charge all the essential elements of the offense.[25] Duplicity in case of such indictments, according to the decisions, is fatal[26] Where offense is purely statutory, the indictment must conclude against the form of the statute[27] At common law it has been held that an indictment against supervisors of roads for not keeping them in repair must conclude "to the common nuisance of the citizens," etc[28]

As in other cases, the proof must support the averments of the indictment, and a material variance is fatal[29]

Evidence The indictment must be supported by sufficient evidence[30] Defendants may introduce any competent evidence tending to show freedom from guilt[31]

Fine. The fine to be imposed on conviction is a matter of statutory regulation[32] Where the obstruction complained of has ceased to exist at the time of trial, a nominal fine and costs may be imposed[33]

§ 201. Expenses

The constitutions and statutes of the various jurisdictions determine on whom the cost of constructing, repairing, and maintaining highways and roads falls, by whom expenditures may or must be made, the limits on such expenditures, and the mode and manner of making them.

While the state may assume liability for the cost and expense involved in the construction, maintenance, and repair of highways and roads,[34] it may, within constitutional limits, impose the costs on any agency of the state it sees fit,[35] or, as discussed infra § 207, it may apportion the costs

Stated broadly, the power and authority to make expenditures and incur indebtedness in connection with the construction, maintenance, and repair of highways and roads, and the limitations thereon, as well as the mode and manner of incurring such indebtedness and making payment, are generally determined by the constitutions and statutes of the various jurisdictions, the provisions of which must be complied with in order that they may be valid charges or expenditures.[36]

A town has been held to have the power to expend money raised for the development and maintenance of its highways in material, equipment, and work appropriate to such end.[37]

§ 202. —— Liability of Municipality to Laborers and Materialmen in General

As a general rule the municipality is liable for work done and material supplied on road work properly authorized.

The power to purchase materials for road construction or repair may be either express[38] or implied from the power to condemn lands having such materials.[39] The power to purchase materials for road construction is not excluded by the grant of power to purchase materials for repair of roads,[40] or the grant of power to obtain materials by the condemnation of real estate.[41] However, the purchase of material at a specified price is not authorized under a statute allowing the overseer to take such materials under the county's power of eminent domain.[42] Ordinarily the municipality is responsible to one who furnishes labor or material for road work properly authorized,[43] but persons

Implied agreement to pay.
Where gasoline and supplies were purchased by commissioner of highways of township under numerous purchases and were received and used in operating road machinery at various places in improvement, repair, and maintenance of highways by the commissioner and where sufficient taxes had been levied to meet amount of obligation during years in which respective purchases were made, an implied contract existed on part of commissioner to pay therefor.—Standard Oil Co. v. Town of Patterson, 21 N.E.2d 12, 300 Ill. App. 385.

Issuance of invalid tax anticipation warrants.
The issuance of tax anticipation warrants by commissioner of highways of township not in conformity with statutory requirements did not relieve township of its obligations to pay for gasoline, oil, and tires for payment of which the warrants were issued, and the acceptance of the void warrants did not estop the seller to maintain suit on its account.—Standard Oil Co. v. Town of Patterson, supra.

Premature filing of claim immaterial.
The failure of county board of revenue to make notes or minutes of its purchase of road material, except to sign order therefor, and seller's premature filing of account or claim for value thereof, did not absolve county from liability to pay therefor, in absence of misappropriation, misapplication, or fraud.—Morgan County v. Money, 189 So. 773, 28 Ala. App. 514, certiorari denied 189 So. 775, 238 Ala. 149.

Presentment of account for payment.

who improve roads or furnish materials therefor without authority or without complying with applicable statutory requirements may not recover,[44] although in some cases authority may be presumed.[45] A claim based on an unauthorized purchase cannot be approved or allowed even though the purchase was made in good faith and used for a good purpose.[46]

Assignments to road officers of claims against the county for road work are valid,[47] provided, of course, they are not fraudulent.[48]

§ 203. —— Road Machinery and Appliances

Authority to purchase machinery and appliances required for road building and repair usually is conferred on particular boards or officers, who may act subject to limitations of the statutes involved

The statutes usually confer authority on highway commissioners or other local officers to purchase such machinery and appliances for road building or repairing as in their discretion seem necessary.[49] Statutory limitations and restrictions on such authority must be observed in the exercise thereof.[50]

Authority to purchase has been held to include the power to lease[51] or to accept donations.[52]

In some jurisdictions previous authorization by the voters of the municipality,[53] or a petition by the taxpayers,[54] or a request by the overseers of a highway district,[55] is essential, in others this is not necessary.[56]

The mode of making payment, and the enforcement of it, depend entirely on the statute.[57]

Expenses incident to purchase

Expenditure by county court commissioners from county funds of reasonable and necessary expenses for its members and county road engineer to attend a road exhibition to inform themselves as to different types of road machinery, to enable county engineer with approval of county court to purchase the best machinery obtainable for use in an extensive roadbuilding program, was held not unlawful—Painter v Heironimus, 125 S E 525 97 W Va 579

"Implements" defined

"Implements," as used in statute empowering board of supervisors to purchase and hire teams, implements, and materials and employ labor and work in the construction and maintenance of highways, is a term broad enough to embrace machines such as tractors, graders, etc—Mississippi Road Supply Co v Hester, 188 So 281, 185 Miss 839, 124 A L R 574

Materials for operating machinery

Under the statute, commissioner of highways of township was held to have prima facie power to purchase materials for use in operating road machinery at various places in improvement, repair, and maintenance of highways, where purchases were in nature of open running accounts of separate sales and delivery and no single purchase exceeded sum of two hundred dollars—Standard Oil Co v Town of Patterson, 21 N E 2d 12, 300 Ill App 385

§ 204. —— Improvement Bonds or Certificates

Payment of the costs of road construction and repair is sometimes made by means of improvement bonds or certificates.

Under some statutes payment of the cost of building, improving, or repairing highways and roads may be made by means of improvement bonds[58] or certificates[59] Under some of these statutes the local officers are not limited to the bare giving or refusing of consent to an issue of bonds, but may impose proper conditions, in the interest of the town,[60] with reference to the making of the contract for the construction of the highway and the doing of the work[61]

Such bonds[62] or certificates[63] are not binding obligations of the county or township issuing them, since they are payable out of the particular fund derived from the assessment of adjacent lands, and from no other source[64]

§ 205. —— Work or Material on Credit

Whether the credit of a municipality may be pledged in connection with the construction and repair of its highways and roads depends on the statutes

Under some statutes the authorities involved have no power to pledge the credit of the town or county in connection with the construction and repair of its highways and roads,[65] at least beyond funds on hand or appropriated[66] or taxes levied[67] Other statutes authorize the furnishing of road work or material on credit,[68] after all the money voted for this purpose by the town has been spent[69]

§ 206. —— Recovery of Advances Made by Highway Officer

Highway officers may recover advances made for authorized expenditures in the repair of roads within their district.

Highway officers may recover advances made by them of the amount necessary to put roads in repair,[70] only, however, where the expenditures were within their authority,[71] and for work within their district.[72]

State aid The constitutions and statutes of some jurisdictions make provision for the reimbursement of counties or other municipalities constructing or improving highways or roads covered thereby for the cost and expense incurred in such work[73] For a county to be entitled to reimbursement by the state, the work involved must have been on a state-aid road within the meaning of the provisions[74]

The county is entitled to reimbursement for expenditures made in acquiring a right of way for a state highway where the statute imposes liability for such costs on the state[75]

§ 207. —— Apportionment

Provision is frequently made for apportionment of the cost of constructing and improving highways and roads among the various municipalities involved

While, as discussed supra § 201, the state may impose the costs of roads and highways on any agency of the state it sees fit, it may also permit the instrumentalities of the state to agree on a division of the costs among them[76] The statutes of some jurisdictions contemplate that each county shall construct and bear the expense of such portions of a highway as are within its limits, no county being required to contribute to the expense of a highway within the limits of another county[77] However, other statutes frequently provide that the expense of road work shall be apportioned among the districts, towns, or counties benefited,[78] or among cities and counties,[79] or between the state and counties or towns,[80] the manner of apportionment differing widely under the various statutes A town not in the district in which the road exists may under some statutes be forced to contribute toward it,[81] if greatly benefited,[82] even though not adjoining,[83] or even though not in the same county[84]

The statutes specify by whom the apportionment is to be made, and in order to be valid the apportionment must be made by the officers or court

a Constitutional and statutory provisions
b Authority to contract
c Requisites and validity of contract
d Modification and abrogation
e Assignment
f Construction and operation generally
g Effect of invalidity or irregularity

a. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions

Statutes regulating contracts for, or relating to, road construction or maintenance are construed in accordance with general rules

Contracts for, or relating to, the construction, maintenance, or repair of highways are to a considerable extent governed by constitutional or statutory provisions,[90] some of which regulate public contracts generally, while others deal specifically with highway contracts[91] To the extent that the two types of statute conflict, the statutes dealing specifically with highway contracts control[92] Whether a general statute is applicable to the contracts of a special road district should be determined in the light of the statutes under which the district was organized[93] Statutes dealing with highway contracts are to be construed in accordance with the general rules governing the construction of statutes[94] considered generally in the C J S title Statutes

Agreements between governmental authorities for aid or cooperation in the construction or improvement of highways are considered supra § 177

b. Authority to Contract

No person or body has power to make a contract for road work so as to bind the state or a municipality except in so far as such power is granted by statute

No person or body has power to enter into a contract for, or relating to, the construction, maintenance, or repair of highways, so as to bind the state or a municipality or road district, except in so far as such power is granted by[95] statute, and where before a valid contract for or relating to road work may be entered into, it is variously required that the funds available for such purpose together with such sums as will become available by taxation during the current year be sufficient to retire the liability to be created by the contract,[25] that a district undertaking further improvements be free of any indebtedness for earlier improvements,[26] that there shall have been a proper appropriation of funds for the kind of work covered in the contract,[27] that the records in the county clerk's office show an unexpended balance in such appropriation at least equal to the amount of the contract,[28] and that there be a certification of such fact by the county clerk[29] The effect of some statutes is to preclude the consummation of a valid contract for highway construction until the bonds for the construction are approved by the taxing authorities[30] A provision forbidding the issuance of state bonds or other evidences of state indebtedness is not violated by a highway construction contract providing for payment for the work as it is done[31] A contract based on a false certificate of the existence of funds to support it may be declared invalid, at least where the contractor has made no expenditures and incurred no liabilities thereunder[32] In at least one jurisdiction a contract for road work is ineffective until an assessment of benefits has been made,[33] and while in some circumstances the invalidity will be deemed to extend to the provisions for preliminary as well as for permanent work, as where the contract is not separable or divisible,[34] in other circumstances the invalidity is held to extend only to the provisions for permanent work[35]

(d) Sufficiency and conclusiveness of bids
(e) Deposit on making bids
(f) Award of contract or rejection of bids

(a) Necessity or Propriety

Statutory or constitutional provisions requiring road contracts to be let on competitive bidding must be complied with

Under statutory or constitutional provisions in most jurisdictions, a contract for road work, at least in certain cases, may be let only on the basis of competitive bidding[36] Such a provision, when applicable, is mandatory,[37] unless it is complied with the contract is void[38] or at least unenforceable,[39] even though the transaction results in no actual financial disadvantage to the state[40] Provisions for public notice, request, or advertisement for bids, see infra subdivision c (3) (c) of this section, and for the letting of the contract to the lowest bidder, see infra subdivision c (3) (f) of this section, have been held to have the object of producing competitive bidding,[41] the object of which, in turn, is the protection of those who will be called on to pay for the work[42] However, the letting of a contract for road work on competitive bidding is not necessary when not required by statute or constitutional provision[43] Competitive bidding statutes do not apply to contracts for the employment of persons whose services are required because of special training, skill, and scientific or technical knowledge necessary to the object to be accomplished[44] Where

Reason for rule

"The value of such services is not to be measured by a mere matching of dollars, so to speak, it is not to be determined upon the irrational assumption that all men in the particular class are equally endowed with skill, knowledge, training, and efficiency, nor are such services rendered more desirable because offered more cheaply in a competitive bidding contest"—Gulf Bitulithic Co v Nueces County, supra

additional work, amounting to considerably more than merely incidental additions, is contracted for without competitive bidding, the contract is unenforceable [45]

Whether or not the requirement of competitive bidding applies to a particular contract depends largely on the language of the statute as properly construed [46] Thus a statute requiring competitive bids for contracts to "improve" highways does not apply to contracts for work in the nature of "repair" [47] Repair of a road by the state highway commissioner does not come within a provision requiring competitive bidding for contracts for improvements instituted by the authorities of a county or municipality [48]

(b) Essentials Generally

Any scheme which prevents or restricts fair competition among prospective bidders is a violation of the requirement of competitive bidding; all bidders must be given an opportunity to bid on the same thing under the same terms and conditions

Provisions requiring the letting of contracts for road work on competitive bidding are violated by any scheme or device which prevents,[49] or tends to prevent[50] or restrict,[51] competition among persons who may desire to become bidders In order to comply with provisions requiring competitive bidding it is essential that all bidders be given an opportunity to bid on the same thing under the same terms and conditions [52] Permitting each bidder to name a different time for completing the contract is a violation of this rule and is improper [53] A col-

Monopoly of material or patented articles

(1) If the specifications call for the use of material of which one bidder has a monopoly, the award of the contract to such bidder will not be sustained —Standard Highway Co v Police Jury of Tangipahoa Parish, 103 So 819, 158 La 294.

(2) But the specification of the use of materials exclusively produced or controlled does not necessarily violate statutory provisions for competitive bidding, where the owner or producer of such material is not himself a bidder on the project and is ready and willing to sell his product to any bidder at the same price - -Eckerle v Ferris, 51 P 2d 766, 175 Okl 107

(3) Further, under an appropriate statute, patented articles, materials, or processes may be specified provided the specifications also allow for alternative methods of construction so that competition may be had —Penniman v Bennett, 224 Ill App 53

Material accessible to all

A specification that paving material consist of clean Ohio River gravel, as free from sand as could be found, in the absence of any showing that such gravel was under the control of any one person or not equally accessible to all did not prevent competitive bidding —Wilson v Board of Com'rs of Warrick County, 137 N E 783, 79 Ind App 250 lusive arrangement among all bidders, as a result of which the accepted bid is exorbitant and unreasonable, vitiates the letting of the contract [54] In a number of jurisdictions, the authorities may,[55] and under some circumstances must,[56] prepare alternate plans and specifications, each calling for a different kind of work or material, and thus place in competition the various types of work or material as well as the bids on each. The specifications must not be too indefinite to permit of competitive bidding [57] The authorities may require bids at unit prices for excavation of different types of material [58]

(c) Advertisement for Bids

Mandatory provisions requiring public notice or advertisement for bids must be complied with when applicable

As a general rule a constitutional or statutory provision requiring public notice or advertisement inviting or soliciting bids for a road contract is mandatory,[59] and a compliance therewith is a condition precedent to the award of the contract,[60] a lack of sufficient compliance renders the contract void[61] or at least unenforceable [62] However, even in cases where advertising is required, there may be circumstances which will dispense with the necessity,[63] as where, competitive bidding being impossible under the circumstances, advertising would only cause unnecessary delay and idle expenditure of money [64] Some statutes are deemed to be directory rather than mandatory,[65] and, advertising is not necessary unless the applicable provisions require it [66] Whether or not the requirement applies to a particular contract depends, of course, on the language of the statutory provision as properly construed [67]

The advertisement must state with sufficient definiteness the character and amount of work to be done or materials to be furnished,[68] and, under some

Highway officials abused discretion in failing to call for alternate bids for highway paving as required by statute when conditions do not require use of particular type of pavement, in view of showing that either of approved types would be successful their action not being justified because of honest opinion that one type will cost more than another, since physical conditions alone are committed to their discretion, the question of cost being the very thing to be determined by the competitive bidding—Landsborough v Kelly, supra

(1) Where the statute requires advertising in the case of contracts involving not less than a stated amount the requirement cannot be obviated by subdividing the contract into a number of contracts each involving less than the stated amount—Brownell Improvement Co v Highway Commissioner of Town of Sumner, 280 Ill App 43

statutes, the place where bidders may examine the plans and specifications.[69] Under some statutes the advertisement must in certain cases call for bids on different types of highways [70]

Manner of advertising Provisions as to the time of publication of notice or advertisement must be complied with [71] Under some statutes provision is made for posting notices in a prescribed manner, where publication in a newspaper in accordance with statutory directions is impossible,[72] or in addition to publication [73]

Readvertisement Where the plans or specifications recited in the notice are changed after advertisement has begun, readvertisement is essential [74]

(d) Sufficiency and Conclusiveness of Bids

Bids should be honest, and should conform to the notice or advertisement for bids In proper cases, the withdrawal of bids may be barred

Bids for road work should be honest and free from any taint of suspicion or fraud [75] In order to be considered, bids must conform to the notice or advertisement for bids,[76] and to statutory provisions which will become part of the contract and in contemplation of which the bids are solicited [77] It has been held that, where only one bid for the

Complete plans and specifications need not be adopted before advertisement and a notice that the county commissioners' court would receive bids for the construction of approximately fifty miles of sand clay road was held sufficient to enable prospective bidders to submit bids for such construction where it was shown that such bids were to be made on the basis of removal of dirt gravel etc by the cubic yard, grubbing the roadway for so much per acre, digging ditches, etc, and not for the construction of a completed road —Gibson v Davis, Tex Civ App, 236 S W 202

Name of manufacturer

A notice for bids on a truck of stated specifications need not name the manufacturer of a particular truck desired to be purchased, and the purchase need not be made from bids with respect to such kind of truck —Mitchell v Walden Motor Co, 177 So 151, 235 Ala 34

Definiteness

An advertisement for bids for stone for the repair of roads is sufficiently definite when it specifies approximately the quantity thought to be necessary, and states that delivery is to be made at the railroad station nearest the work in progress, the advertisement need not state what amount of stone is required for repairs and what amount for improvements —Middle Valley Trap Rock Min Co v Morris County, 60 A 358 71 N J Law 333, affirming 57 A 258, 70 N J Law 625

General specifications subject to change

Where specifications for road contracts are on file in the department of highways, and are made applicable to particular contracts and advertisements for bids by reference, such specifications may be changed from time to time —Trinkle v Commonwealth, supra

70. Applicability of requirement

Work of tearing up road, changing grade, width, and in some places, location thereof, and paving with puddled macadam or other materials held "construction" project, not "improvement" project, and hence required advertising for bids —Putman v Murden, 184 N E 796, 97 Ind App 313

Advertisement insufficient

The phrase "three distinct types of highways" in statute regarding bids on highway contracts must be given its ordinary meaning, and an advertised notice for bids on puddled macadam surface, bituminous retread surface, and bituminous coated aggregate surface pavement was not for "three distinct types of highways" within that meaning —Putman v Murden, supra

Enlargement to cover purchase of bonds

Addition to contractor's bid for highway construction to save bank purchasing highway bonds from loss because of difference between par and market value of bonds vitiated bid and subsequent proceedings —Hunter v Santa Barbara County, supra

Bid on behalf of highway official

A contract for the performance of certain work on a highway is illegal and prohibited by statute where the person making the bid was a person interposed, acting in behalf of a member of the police jury and the chairman of the board of supervisors or road commission of the road district —Hankins v Police Jury Natchitoches Parish, 95 So 102, 152 La 1000

76 Bids contingent on acceptance of several bids

That bids were contingent on separate bids on each unit of road construction being accepted as whole held not to vitiate contract, where commissioners' court found aggregate was lowest and best bid, even though no other bidders, submitted similarly contingent bids —W L Pearson & Co v Hutchinson County, Tex Civ App, 52 S W 2d 509, error refused

Time of performance

Where the advertisement makes time of performance an essential part of the bid its omission renders the bid incomplete, and in such event the bid cannot be filled out, or the time of performance inserted, after it is opened and received by the county board, and an award to such bidder is invalid —Root v Douglas County, 180 N W 46, 105 Neb 262

77. National Industrial Recovery Act

Bids for public corporation's highway improvement contracts must comply with provisions of National Industrial Recovery Act, where statute creating corporation to make self-liquidating county highway improvements authorized loan agreements with federal governments and referred to Recovery Act —Tranter v Allegheny County Authority, 173 A. 289, 316 Pa. 65.

work is made, it is not a competitive bid within the meaning of the statute [78]

Withdrawal of bids A statute empowering the commissioner of highways to regulate bidding, etc, authorizes a rule preventing the withdrawal of bids once deposited,[79] and such a regulation is binding on both the commissioner and the contractor [80]

Relief from bid One bidding on public work may be given equitable relief from his bid, if it failed to express his real intent at the time he offered it [81]

(e) Deposit on Making Bids

Deposits accompanying bids as security that the bidder, if successful, will accept the contract and furnish bond may properly be forfeited if the successful bidder fails to furnish bond

Where, in accordance with statutory provisions and the notice or advertisement for bids, bids must be accompanied by certified checks as security that, if successful, the bidder will accept the contract and file bond as provided, on failure of the successful bidder to furnish the bond, his check may properly be forfeited [82] Inability to secure a bond will not preclude forfeiture [83] However, it has been held that, if the contractor is allowed to enter on the performance of the contract without having first furnished bond, the deposit may not be forfeited [84] If the bid is withdrawn before its acceptance, the deposit is not forfeited and the bidder is entitled to its return [85]

(f) Award of Contract or Rejection of Bids

The successful bidder is entitled to the contract, the decision of the authorities as to the best bidder is quasi-judicial and will not be disturbed in the absence of fraud or abuse of discretion Under many statutes the contract must be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder.

The successful bidder has a legal right to the execution of a contract [86] The decision of the authorities in awarding contracts to the best bidder has been said to be quasi-judicial, and conclusive on the contractor,[87] and will not be upset by the courts unless fraud[88] or abuse of discretion[89] is shown In the absence of statute, the authorities are not authorized to give preference to the bid of a resident over that of a nonresident [90]

Lowest responsible bidder Under provisions for competitive bidding, the authorities generally are required to award the contract to the lowest responsible bidder [91] Such statutes are as a rule

mandatory[92] Of course, if the statute is inapplicable to the contract in question and no competitive bidding is required, it is not necessary to let the contract to the lowest bidder,[93] and, even under some statutes requiring competitive bidding, letting the contract to the lowest responsible bidder is not required[94] In choosing the lowest responsible bidder the authorities are not required to select the one whose bid is lowest in dollars and cents,[95] they may take into consideration the comparative qualities of different materials offered for the money, as well as their adaptability to the particular use required[96] So too they may reject the lowest bid if made by one who is not responsible,[97] but they may not reject the lowest bid by a responsible bidder on the ground that such bidder, while responsible, is not the most responsible of the bidders[98] In determining the lowest bidder, the authorities may not adopt a formula or standard other than, or different from, that on which the bids were submitted[99]

Rejection of all bids Under an appropriate statutory provision, the highway authorities may reject all bids on certain projects and do the work by day labor, but they must in such case follow the statutory directions as to the filing of the plans, specifications, and bids, and the reasons for rejecting the bids[1]

(4) Form and Execution of Contract

Statutory provisions as to the form or manner of executing the contract must be complied with. The contract must be in writing, if the statute so requires, and must be executed by one who has such authority.

Statutory provisions as to the form or manner of executing contracts of the character under consideration must be complied with[2] If there is no prescribed statutory form of contract, the form may be determined by the contracting authorities subject to the statutes under which they act[3] Where a statute dispenses with competitive bidding in the case of work done by the municipality and paid for by the day, a formal contract entered on the minutes of the commissioners' court is not required for work so done[4] A statute providing that the contract shall be executed within a stated time after award does not invalidate a contract executed by both parties after the expiration of such time[5]

Under the express provisions of some statutes, contracts for road work, at least where they involve more than a stated amount, must be in writing[6] However, it has been held that a contract for ordinary repairs, when the employment of laborers is necessary, need not be in writing[7] Where the signing of a formal contract is required, ordinarily there can be no contract until this is done[8] Under some

A contract executed by one without authority is invalid.[10] In making the contract, the members of the board or body authorized to do so must act as a body and not as individuals,[11] but if the board or body appoints or authorizes an agent to act for it a contract entered into by such agent is valid.[12] The action of the board must be taken by proper vote.[13] Under some provisions it is held that a recorded aye and nay vote of the board is essential,[14] but under others it has been held that the absence of the formal minutes of the board's action is not fatal.[15]

Whether or not the dealings of the parties have resulted in a contract is determined by the rules applicable to contracts generally.[16]

(5) Contents

If the contract is unreasonable or recklessly improvident it will not be enforced against the state or municipality. The provisions of the contract must conform to all applicable statutes, to the bond election notice, and to the specifications on which the bids were had.

such definiteness is not entirely indispensable,[21] and that in the exercise of a proper discretion the contract may be written on a unit basis, that is, an agreed sum to be paid for each unit completed, without any stipulation as to the number of units that will be required or the total amount to be paid[22]

The contract must provide for the construction or improvement of that road contemplated and described in the proceedings authorizing the work[23] So a material variance in the route of a road from that prescribed in the act creating the road district renders the contract void[24] Where, after the contract is entered into, material changes respecting the roads to be improved are made by statute, the contract becomes ineffective and cannot bind the contractor.[25] The contract must conform to the bond election notice[26] and to the engineer's estimate.[27] It must also conform at least substantially to the specifications on which the bids were had,[28] it is invalid if it contains new specifications beneficial to the contractor,[29] and the specifications cannot be altered without new advertisement and new bids[30] The contract must be the one offered by the advertisement, and any material departure therefrom invalidates the contract[31]

32. Wash—Coyle Const Co v Skagit County, 32 P 2d 106, 177 Wash 520

Provisions held valid

(1) A provision in a government contract that the contractor "will make no claim against the United States by reason of estimates, tests, or representations of any officer or agent of the United States" is valid and binding—Southern Surety Co v U S, 75 Ct Cl 47

(2) In view of the statute as to bond of highway contractors, a highway construction contract dividing the work into sections of three miles each, to be paid for in full as completed, was not invalid as insufficiently safeguarding the county's interests—Owen v Fleming-Stitzer Road Building Co, Tex Civ App, 250 S W 1038

33. Provisions held valid

(1) Provision of highway construction contract that, if contractor did not properly perform contract, state highway engineer should give notice in writing to contractor and his surety of such delay, neglect, or default, and that, if contractor did not within ten-day period proceed in accordance with contract, then state highway commission should have authority, without violating contract, to take prosecution of work out of contractor's hands and enter into agreement for completion of the contract was reasonable and valid—Fort Worth Nat Bank v State, Tex Civ App, 158 S W 2d 885, error refused

(2) Where a road improvement contract provided that, if the contractor's conduct should result in annulment of the contract, the road district could complete the work and charge the cost to the contractor but reciprocally provided that, if the cost of doing the work by the district was less than the contract price, the contractor could recover the difference, such provision was held a valid stipulation as to measure of damages—Perdue & Hill v Road Improvement Dist No 1 of Cross County, 251 S W 886, 159 Ark 117

(3) Other provisions—Duncan v. Clary 254 P 386, 123 Kan 24

34. Provisions held valid

(1) Highway pavement contract providing that contractor's unit contract price would be considered as full compensation for all materials and other items entering into the construction of pavement, and that no additional compensation would be allowed for any excess thickness was neither prohibited nor illegal—Sandy Hites Co v State Highway Commission, 149 S W 2d 828, 347 Mo 954, transferred, see, App, 128 S W 2d 646

(2) Contract under which highway commission extended highway construction contract at unit prices, faithfully complied with by contractor, was approved by court—Leininger v H L Cannady Co, 282 P. 474, 139 Okl 301—Leininger v Ward-Beekman & Brooks, 282 P 467, 139 Okl 292

(3) Other provisions—Gulf Bitulithic Co v Nueces County, Tex.Com.

requiring the contractor to purchase bonds,[35] a provision obligating the contractor to pay for labor and material,[36] a provision requiring the contractor to carry public liability insurance,[37] a provision for the retention of a percentage of the contract price to satisfy liens,[38] a provision prohibiting assignment of the contract or of moneys payable thereunder,[39] a provision for arbitration,[40] and a provision requiring the county to pay the premium on the contractor's bond[41]

d. Modification and Abrogation

A contract for road work may be canceled by mutual consent An agreement to modify the contract must be supported by consideration, and may be required to be in writing Under a reservation of power to change plans and specifications, only such changes may be made as do not change the essential terms of the contract

A contract for road work may be canceled by mutual consent[42] Such a cancellation terminates the contract,[43] and no liability of either party can be predicated thereupon[44] A reservation in a contract of a right to annul it on the occurrence of a stated contingency may be waived[45] Where a contract fails to obtain the required approval, and a new contract is executed following the former in most essentials, the first contract is unenforceable[46]

Modification In the absence of a provision authorizing it to do so, neither the board of commissioners nor the person appointed by it to superintend the actual work of construction has power to change the terms of the contract after its execution by the parties, so as to bind the county[47] Where a statute requires that public contracts be in writing, and a road contract provides that modifications shall be in writing, such provisions are mandatory and oral changes in the contract are ineffectual[48] An agreement to modify the contract must be supported by consideration[49]

Provision for changes in plans and specifications Under a contract so providing, changes may be made in the specifications by the person or body designated, and such changes are binding on all parties[50] Such changes, however, may not be arbitrary,[51] or fraudulent or grossly erroneous,[52] or such as would substantially alter the terms of the contract or require the contractor to discharge burdens which he did not contract to assume.[53] It is within the power of the highway commission to provide in its specifications and contracts for supplemental agreements to take care of price adjustments found necessary in the course of the work.[54] Changes which do not materially alter the contract do not require readvertisement[55] or approval by the persons or bodies whose approval is essential to the validity of the contract in the first instance.[56]

Ordinarily a highway contractor who has received the benefit of a change in plans and specifications by receiving the award of the contract will not be heard to complain of the invalidity thereof,[57] but this principle of estoppel will not apply where the change is against public policy.[58]

e. Assignment

The assignee of a road contract acquires no greater rights than the contractor had

Where the statute or contract so provides, an assignment of a road contract is not valid unless filed with, and consented to in writing by, the highway department,[59] but such a provision may be waived by the state.[60] The assignee acquires no greater rights than the contractor had.[61] In the absence of any provision to such effect in the assignment, an assignee is not liable for money borrowed by his assignor, the contractor.[62]

f. Construction and Operation Generally

A contract relating to work on public highways is to be construed and given effect in accordance with the rules governing contracts generally

A contract between the state or a municipality and individuals for road work must be construed, and the liabilities thereunder determined, by the same rules as govern contracts between individuals.[63] Thus it has been held that it will be construed strictly against the party preparing it,[64] that it will be construed with reference to the law under which it was written[65] and which thus becomes a part of it,[66] and that it will be construed in accordance with the construction given it by the parties.[67] In an action on the contractor's bond, the contract should be construed most strongly against the surety company.[68] Particular provisions in road contracts should be reasonably construed in view of all the circumstances.[69] An administrative con-

"Aggregate"

A contract between the state highway department and construction company, which required company

struction of a similar contract may be considered, but it cannot be followed if it is contrary to the law[70] Other instruments, such as plans and standard specifications, blueprints, notices to contractors, etc, should be read into the contract,[71] at least where the contract[72] or the advertisement for bids[73] refers to them as being part of the contract, but standard specifications and provisions will yield to, and be superseded by, specific provisions in the contract[74] A provision in a contract that the decision of a designated highway official on any question connected with the execution of the contract should be final and conclusive authorizes such official to construe the contract along with the specifications considered as part of it in determining any such questions[75]

Operation and effect. The operation and effect of a contract for road work are governed by the rules applicable to contracts generally[76]

Unofficial estimate

Although the highway department made preliminary estimates as to the nature of the work for the purpose of advertising for bids for the construction of a highway on a "classified" basis and engineers in department told an excavation contractor that he could rely on estimation notice, before contractor made his bid, requiring bids to be made on an "unclassified" basis amounted to express notice to contractor that he acted at his own risk, regardless of estimates—Powell v State, Tex Civ App 118 S W 2d 960, error refused

Estimate not relied on

Where figures were submitted to a government contractor of the several amounts of rock and common to be excavated, but it was stated that they were estimates only and that bidders were required to examine carefully the site of the work, and the contractor made a very cursory examination thereof and then certified that it understood that the figures submitted were approximate only, and that it had "personally" examined the site, and thereafter it developed that there was a materially greater amount of rock in proportion to the common than disclosed by the estimates, defendant could not be held for a misrepresentation amounting to a warranty—Southern Surety Co v U S, 75 Ct Cl 47

Contractor charged with knowledge

A contractor for a highway project who intends to bid thereon should examine specifications at the place indicated in advertisement for bids, since statute places such burden on him and highway department is not required to ascertain, before accepting proposal, that bidder has read and understands the specifications under which he is bidding—Ragland v Commonwealth, 200 S E 601, 172 Va 186

g. Effect of Invalidity or Irregularity

As a general rule a contractor who furnishes labor or material under a road contract which, without being immoral or prohibited, is irregular or ineffective, may recover the reasonable value thereof. An unauthorized contract may be ratified by the board or body having authority to make such a contract.

Although there is authority to the contrary,[77] it is generally held that where a contractor furnishes labor or material under a contract which, while not immoral or prohibited, is irregular or ineffective he is nevertheless entitled to recover on quantum meruit for the reasonable value of such labor or material[78] Thus, where a contract between an engineer and the district for both preliminary work and supervision of the actual construction never becomes effective because no assessment of benefits is made, and the project is abandoned after performance of the preliminary work, the engineer, although not entitled to recover for the preliminary work under the contract, is entitled to payment on quantum meruit,[79] provided he acted in good faith.[80] So too, where a contract for road work is let and the work completed and certificates issued to the contractor, and the statute under which these things were done is then declared invalid, the contractor, although not entitled to recover on the contract or certificates, is entitled to the value of the work done and the materials fur-

Release from liability on guaranty

Where a quarry company contracts with a county to furnish crushed stone to contractors on the roads of the county, the county guaranteeing payment for the stone, the contract embraced all the stone which the quarry company might supply to any and all contractors, and an agreement between the quarry company and a contractor that in no way increased the liability of the county did not operate to release the county —Holston Corporation v Wise County, 109 S E 180, 131 Va 142

Failure to furnish bond

(1) It has been held that a contractor may recover on quantum meruit against a road improvement district where he is permitted to perform the work within the knowledge of the commissioners of the district although he does not execute a bond for its faithful performance as required by statute —Burt v Road Improvement Dist No 11, 253 S W 1, 159 Ark 275

(2) On the other hand, it has been held that, under a statute providing for the letting of the work to improve highways to the lowest bidder, who must enter into a contract for the work and give bond for its faithful performance, etc, the lowest bidder for a highway improvement cannot by entering on the work without signing a contract therefor and giving a bond for its performance make the town liable on implied contract for work performed, whether he entered on the work with or without the consent of the selectmen —Kelley v Torrington 68 A 855, 80 Conn 378

Where county sought to be charged not benefited

Where contractor was verbally authorized to construct a road by members of board of county commissioners individually and not as a board and the road was not established by the county commissioners as a county road, county was not liable for the cost of construction of the road on theory of implied contract based on benefits received and retained since, the road not being a county road, county had no authority to expend money on it —George W Condon Co v Board of Com'rs of Natrona County, 103 P 2d 401, 56 Wyo 38

Necessity of acceptance

Where the persons authorized to enter into a contract had no knowledge that a contractor was performing work under an unauthorized contract until the bills for services were presented, and, since they had no choice as to acceptance or rejection of the services, never accepted them the county was not liable in quasi contract —Rolette State Bank v Rolette County, 218 N W 637, 56 N D 571

In Texas

(1) It has been held that a county which allegedly accepted gravel for construction of a road would be liable for the reasonable value of the benefits received although the contract, because made without competitive bids, was unauthorized —East Texas Const Co v Liberty County, Tex Civ App, 139 S W 2d 669

(2) On the other hand, it has been held that a contractor who performs work and furnishes material under a contract entered into by a commissioner without the advice and consent of the court of commissioners, as required by statute, cannot recover the reasonable value of the services and material —Goss v Fannin County, Tex Civ App, 244 S W 204

Determination of amount recoverable

(1) In a suit on quantum meruit by an engineer to recover for services in preparing plans for a road district, the value of his plans was properly determined by the reasonable cost of the work necessary to prepare them —Road Improvement Dist No 2, Johnson County v Burkett 260 S W 718, 163 Ark 578

(2) A road improvement district cannot be made to pay on a quantum meruit basis more than the value of a part of the work done when it received the benefit thereof —Burt v Road Improvement Dist No 11, 253 S W 1, 159 Ark 275

Failure to keep account of expenses

Failure of the engineers to keep a separate account of the amounts paid out by them as expenses, except as to the amount of time and number of men used in the work, does not defeat their recovering compensation —White-Jackson Road Improvement Dist No 1 v Blackshire & Mercer, 241 S W 386, 153 Ark 581

nished,[81] and the liability therefor may be apportioned between the county and the de facto improvement district created by the invalid statute.[82] It has also been held that in an exceptional case the contractor may recover according to the terms of such a contract, as where the contract was entered into in good faith and in the belief that it was valid, and the contractor has spent substantial funds in full compliance with the contract.[83] If, in the course of performing a valid contract, additional work is done pursuant to an ineffective agreement with the authorities, the contractor may recover the reasonable value of such additional work.[84] However, it has been held that if the contract is void as imposing on the municipality an indebtedness not sanctioned by law, the contractor cannot recover on quantum meruit and thus accomplish by indirection what could not be done directly,[85] and if the contract is contrary to public policy the highway authorities cannot lawfully stipulate for its performance even for a reduced consideration.[86] A statute authorizing recovery of the reasonable value of labor and material furnished under a contract irregular for failure to follow the "form" of proceedings described by law does not apply to a contract entered into without compliance with the prescribed procedure leading up to the making of the contract.[87] Under a statute so providing, any money paid by the state in consideration of a contract void for noncompliance with statutory provisions as to the letting of contracts may be recovered in an action by the state.[88]

Ratification and estoppel A contract made by one without authority in behalf of a board or body having authority to make such contract may be ratified by the latter.[89] A contract which is illegal because the question of increasing the municipality's debt was not first submitted to the vote of the electors may be ratified by a subsequent election,[90] but a contract which is wholly illegal and void cannot be ratified,[91] and the municipality cannot be estopped to set up its invalidity.[92] In order to constitute ratification, the act must be accompanied by a manifestation of intent to ratify,[93] or must be of such nature as to be utterly inconsistent with any other course of conduct.[94]

Partial invalidity If some provision in a contract is invalid, but is severable from the remainder of the contract, as incidental and collateral thereto, the contract as a whole is not invalidated.[95]

(1) Performance or Breach

(a) By contractor
(b) By public agency

(a) By Contractor

The nature and extent of the work to be performed by the contractor are to be determined by a proper construction of the contract He must perform the contract as he has agreed, and is liable in damages for failure to do so

The nature and extent of the work to be performed by the contractor under a highway construction contract are to be determined by a proper construction of the provisions of the contract.[96] He is bound by all the conditions of the contract,[97] and must perform it as he has agreed[98] Failure to perform in compliance with the terms of the contract constitutes a breach of contract,[99] and subjects him to liability in damages therefor[1] The contractor is not liable, however, for the breach of a contract, to which he was not a party, whereby the highway

Unsound improvement

A contractor undertaking a highway improvement must perform according to the plans and specifications furnished and he can neither change the plans nor quit the work because he believes the improvement as projected is bad from an engineering standpoint —Engler v Aldridge, 75 P 2d 290, 147 Kan 43

Compliance with engineers' requirements

(1) Under a contract providing that the quantities used are to be determined by the engineers' estimates of the finished concrete in place, the contractor must comply with fair and just requirements of the engineers governing construction, such as their directions as to the constituents of concrete to go into the mixer and the proportions thereof —Maine Sand & Gravel Co v Green & Wilson, 177 A 185, 133 Me 313

(2) Where a contract leaves a detail of the work to the determination of the engineer, and the contractor performs the work in respect thereof as directed by the engineer, and uses a material which the engineer directs him to use, and executes that detail of the work, in such case neither the engineer nor the county can be heard to say, after the work has been performed, that the material was defective or the work improper —Spokane County v Pacific Bridge Co, 213 P 151, 106 Or 550

Liquidated damages

A contractor abandoning the contract on refusal of the county to pay exorbitant claims is not relieved from liability for liquidated damages —L Romano Co v Skagit County, 268 P 898, 148 Wash 367

Retention of reserved percentages

On contractor's abandonment of highway contract, county has right to retain reserved percentages — Southern Surety Co v Merchants' & Farmers' Bank of Avilla, 176 N E 846, 203 Ind. 173, rehearing denied 179 N E 327, 203 Ind 173.

department agreed to purchase the material required by the paving contract [2]

In the absence of provisions to the contrary, the contractor is required to furnish at his own expense the machinery and implements necessary to perform the work he has contracted to do [3]

The manner in which the contractor performs the work does not change the contract with respect to classification of disputed excavation.[4]

(b) By Public Agency

A highway improvement contract must be carried out in good faith by the contracting public agency, which is ordinarily liable to the contractor for damages resulting from a breach thereof On default of the contractor, the public agency may take over and complete the work at the expense of the contractor, provided conditions precedent are complied with

The nature and extent of the duties of the public agency contracting for the construction or improvement of a highway are to be determined by a proper construction of the provisions of the contract [5] A contract lawfully entered into must be carried out in good faith,[6] and, while there can be no recovery on the theory of breach of contract in the absence of a valid contract,[7] ordinarily the public agency is liable in damages to the contractor for a breach, on its part, of a valid contract,[8] such as a refusal to make payments according to the terms of the contract [9] In the absence of waiver by the contractor,[10] while the contract remains in force, the public agency is bound to permit the contractor to perform the work covered by the contract,[11] and is liable to him in damages for improperly preventing him from completing such work,[12] or for losses occasioned to him by its unreasonable interference [13]

(2) A state paving contractor could not recover from the state for damages claimed because water, sew-

So, where it fails to fulfill a contractual obligation to furnish rights of way, it is liable in damages to the contractor,[14] but provisions requiring the public agency contracting for the construction of the highway to furnish the requisite right of way must be read in conjunction with other provisions of the contract requiring approval of other agencies.[15] Under a contract provision authorizing the highway district to suspend the work temporarily because of unfavorable conditions, a suspension made in the good faith belief that conditions were unfavorable to continue the work is not a breach of the contract, and, if the contractor refuses to resume work when requested to do so thereafter, he is not entitled to recover for anticipated profits. Moreover, if the contractor intends to treat a suspension as a breach, he should so state at the time thereof.[16] The public agency is liable for material furnished pursuant to the contract but which was wrongfully rejected.[17] A discretion vested in the agent of the public authority charged with supervising and directing the work must be exercised in a fair, honest, and reasonable manner,[18] and requirements of the government consulting engineer that the contractor depart materially from specifications in matters substantially increasing his expenses constitute a breach of the contract.[19] Specifications by the public agency are binding on it, and loss resulting therefrom must be borne by it;[20] it is only where uncertainty is indicated in representation of facts relating to the work that the contractor is bound to satisfy himself as to existing conditions or suffer the penalty imposed by the contract for failure to do so.[21]

On default of the contractor the public agency may take over the work and complete it[22] at the expense of the contractor,[23] and for this purpose may appropriate the entire fund withheld on the contract if necessary.[24] In exercising the right to take over, the public agency must comply with the conditions precedent provided for in the contract,[25] such as a provision requiring notice.[26] A contract giving the county the right to take over the equipment and material on the project and use them in completion thereof on default of the contractor gives the county a contractual lien on the machinery and equipment which is enforceable in equity against the contractor or anyone who purchased the property with notice of the contract provision, and machinery and equipment sold to the contractor, after the contract was executed, by one knowing they were to be used on the project were subject to such lien.[27]

Where company, in submitting bids for reconstruction of a state highway, involving erection of cofferdams, relied on under-water elevations shown on contour map constituting a part of plans submitted to bidders and cofferdam operation was more costly than contemplated because elevations shown were erroneous, the elevations shown amounted to a material representation on part of state, which thereby became liable to company for damage sustained by it, notwithstanding provision of contract that no claim was to be made by reason of representation of any officer or agent of state and the fact that company failed to take soundings to ascertain whether or not elevations shown were correct did not preclude it from recovering.—Young Fehlhaber Pile Co. v. of the work is for the benefit of both the surety of the contractor and the public agency, and the latter's premature payment of the retained fund renders it liable to the surety for the amount it should have retained to the extent of unpaid claims for labor and materials used in the project for which the surety was responsible [28]

Failure of the public body to perform a contractual duty will not render it liable for damages not attributable to such breach of duty,[29] and the contractor cannot recover for damages which would not have resulted had he completed the work by the date required in the contract [30] A town is not liable for costs and allowance which the commissioners were directed to pay as a result of personal dereliction [31]

(2) Compensation or Damages

(a) In general

(b) Unit prices, measurements, and estimates

(a) In General

The right to, and amount of, compensation to be paid the contractor depends on the terms of the contract, and, if the work is performed in compliance with the contract, he is entitled to the amount agreed to therein. If he is excused from further performance after he has partly performed, he is entitled to recover for the work done and materials furnished, but, if the public agency completes the work after a breach by the contractor, the latter's recovery is offset by the damages sustained by the former The measure of damages for breach on account of defective work is the reasonable cost of remedying the defect

The right to, and amount of, compensation to be paid to the contractor on his completion of the work is regulated by the terms of the construction contract [32] The contractor is entitled to the amount of compensation agreed to in the contract if the work is performed in compliance therewith,[33] but not otherwise [34] There can be no recovery for loss of anticipated profits resulting from an authorized change of the construction plans where the contract contained specific provisions against such recovery,[35] and, where changed specifications were assented to by the contractor, he is not entitled to re-

Where the contractor, after part performance, has been excused from further performance by prevention, or by the repudiation or abandonment of the contract by the public authority, he may recover at the contract rates the value of the services rendered or bring action on the contract for damages [37] Thus, where the contractor after partial performance has rightfully repudiated or abandoned the contract, he is entitled to recover for the work done [38] and materials furnished, [39] the expense necessarily incurred in preparing for further performance, [40] and, in a proper case, prospective profits, [41] but not for payments to employees or expense incurred in retaining his machinery and organization after the abandonment of the work in the expectation that work might be resumed [42] Acts which might justify the contractor in abandoning his contract, and enable him to recover for work already done, are not necessarily sufficient, however, to allow him to recover for prospective profits, [43] and the contractor is not entitled to recover on a quantum meruit where complete performance was not prevented or waived by the other party, although the abandonment by the contractor was authorized by the terms of the contract [44] The contractor is entitled to compensation for the use of his equipment which was taken over by the district after the latter had breached the contract and the contractor had abandoned work thereunder, but the rental price should in no event exceed the value of the property. Where the use of the equipment was pursuant to an agreement made after the breach and in contemplation of the lawsuit which resulted from such breach, the taking over of the equipment was not wrongful, and the compensation should be limited to legal interest on the value of the property regardless of what it brought on a subsequent mortgage foreclosure sale, particularly in the absence of evidence showing the proper rental value of the property [45]

Where the contractor fails to complete his contract, and the county takes over the work, the contractor is entitled to recover at the contract rates for the work he has done less any damages sustained by the county because of his failure to complete the contract, [46] but a contractor piling logs on the right of way without burning them as required is not entitled to the cost of removing them [47] Under a statute or contract authorizing the state or municipality to complete the work at the expense of the contractor, the former may recover the actual cost of completing the contract, where it has acted diligently and in good faith, and there is no evidence of fraud or negligence, [48] but there can be no recovery prior to the completion of the work where the work of

Contract as enlarging rights

Provision that highway district could notify contractor to discontinue all work or any part thereof, and completion was done under a contract such that the cost of completion could not be determined before completion,[49] although the rule is otherwise where the uncompleted work was relet for a definite sum.[50] In the absence of waiver, by taking over without compliance with conditions precedent provided for by the contract, the state or municipality voluntarily divides the entire contract and entitles the contractor to compensation for the value of the work and material furnished.[51] Where the contract gives the public agency the right, in the event of the contractor's default, to complete the contract at his expense or charge him a fixed amount per day as liquidated damages for delay, and a similar provision is made in the contract between the contractor and the subcontractor, the election of the public agency to complete the contract precludes it from charging the contractor liquidated damages and likewise precludes the contractor from making such a charge against the subcontractor.[52]

The measure of damages for breach of a highway contract on account of defective work is the reasonable cost of remedying the defects.[53]

Joint bidders Where two contractors have put in a joint bid for highway improvement work, and the contract is awarded by the state in the name of one of them, and both jointly proceed with the work, the equities against the state of the one not named in the contract must be worked out in the contractor's name by assignment or making a claim under the contract, but as between themselves accounts should be stated as if they were independent contractors. The assumption of liability to the state for completion of the highway by the one to whom the contract was awarded did not make him liable to the other respecting the latter's share in the enterprise, and, where the latter has defaulted, he is liable to the former for the amount by which his reasonable expenses of doing the work necessitated by the default exceeded the contract price.[54]

(b) Unit Prices, Measurements, and Estimates

Under some contracts the amount of the compensation to be paid is determined by applying specified unit prices to actual measurements or estimates of the work done, and, where it is provided that an estimate, certificate, or determination of a designated officer or board with respect to the performance of, or amount due under, the contract is conclusive, the parties are bound by such determination in the absence of fraudulent or arbitrary action or gross mistake

Frequently the contract is so worded and construed as to provide for the payment, not of a lump sum, but rather of a sum to be determined by applying specified unit prices to actual measurements of the work done,[55] and in such case the contractor is entitled to recover the amount agreed to be paid as determined from a computation of the units of work performed,[56] and cannot recover damages because of an authorized change in plans which increased the number of units of one class and decreased the number in another.[57] In measuring the work done, specific provisions of the contract should be followed,[58] and measurements made according to the contract method will prevail over measurements otherwise made.[59]

Provision is sometimes made for an estimate, certificate, or determination of the highway engineer or other designated officer or board of the amount or quantity of work done or materials furnished, or for a determination by him of all questions involving the amount earned under the contract. Such provisions are enforceable[60] and, in the absence of fraudulent or arbitrary action or gross mistake, the estimate, certificate, or determination is conclusive where made so by agreement of the parties,[61] but not in the absence of such agreement.[62] Such an agreement will be construed in harmony with the expressed intention of the parties,[63] but plain language in the contract is required to make the determination conclusive,[64] and even where a provision for conclusiveness exists, the decision is not

58. Provision for shrinkage

(1) Under contract for road construction providing that amount of material excavated will be measured in its original position by cross-sectioning unless engineer elects to cross-section embankments after material has been placed, in which event he shall provide for shrinkage of ten per cent, where measurements were made while earth was fresh and newly placed, finding that ten per cent should be subtracted was consonant with common observation and experience that fresh earth packs and shrinks.

Customary use of spread stakes

Where highway construction contract required payment for base course materials according to quantities computed from truck loads delivered on road way, highway engineer's failure either to measure contractor's stock pile or give rock tickets as receipts for truck loads delivered therefrom would not require that state accept contractor's estimate of rock in stock pile and make payment in accordance with such estimate, notwithstanding alleged accuracy of contractor's estimate as to amount of rock which had been in stock pile, particularly where it had been custom in that highway district to use spread stakes and not rock tickets, and where state established that road was correctly staked for a theoretical top width of thirty feet and was constructed in reasonable accordance with the staking, although subsequent measurement showed a top or surface width of thirty-three and nine-tenths feet; contractor could not use width measurement of surface subsequent to completion of construction as foundation for computation of additional quantities over contract requirements which it claimed were actually placed on road at time of construction.—L. conclusive if it is made fraudulently[65] or in bad faith,[66] or if it goes beyond the scope of the matter submitted to the officer for determination,[67] or is not made in the manner required by the contract,[68] although, if made in accordance with any method provided in the contract, the contractor must abide the result.[69] Furthermore, an estimate is not so conclusive as to preclude the subsequent correction of a gross and palpable mistake therein,[70] but, if the decision of the engineer, even if erroneous, is not so clearly and manifestly wrong as to imply fraud, bad faith, or failure to exercise an honest judgment, it is final and conclusive.[71] Although the right of the road district to change engineers during the life of the contract is not limited by the contract making the engineer's estimates final, such right cannot be exercised to secure a fraudulent or unfair advantage.[72] The provisions of the applicable contract must be looked to in determining whether a particular determination is conclusive.[73] An agreement to abide by the decision of the engineer as arbiter does not confer authority

Particular contracts construed.

(1) The decision of the engineer as to whether detours required to be maintained by the contractor, were properly maintained was conclusive, where the contract provided that work should be done under the direct supervision of the engineer and that he was to decide all questions as to the quality or acceptability of the work performed and as to the manner of performance and all questions as to the acceptable fulfillment of the contract on the part of the contractor.—Fort Worth Nat. (5) Provision in contract that highway director's decision should be final will be upheld in so far as mechanics of contract are concerned but does not give director exclusive power to interpret contract.—State ex rel. S. Monroe & Son Co. v. Tracy, 196 N.E. 650, 129 Ohio St. 550.

(6) A provision that the opinion of the engineer as to the meaning or intent of the contract shall be final and binding requires only that the contractor perform the work in accordance with the engineer's decision in order to avoid delay, and a declon him to change the contract or to refuse allowances based on plain and ambiguous terms of the contract [74] Where the engineer is appointed by the state highway commission, his authority to bind the county by alterations in the plans must be found in the contract and exercised in the manner prescribed [75] A statute providing for payment from time to time on estimates and orders of the highway commission implies that the commission shall use judgment and discretion and does not limit its function to acceptance of the contractor's estimates [76]

b. Strict or Substantial Performance

A substantial performance of the contract is generally sufficient, but there must be at least substantial compliance.

A substantial compliance with the contract in good faith is generally sufficient [77] Each case presenting the issue of substantial performance must be determined on its own particular facts [78] Under a contract giving the state the right to require the removal and replacement of any part of the work which was not performed in accordance with the contract, the state can order the removal of any part of the pavement which was substantially defective [79] irrespective of the average character of the entire pavement, [80] and in such case the contractor cannot recover the amount expended for removing and relaying such parts of the pavement, [81] but, where the contractor was required to replace pavement substantially conforming to the contract, he was entitled to reimbursement from the state [82]

c. Time for Performance

(1) By contractor
(2) By public agency

(1) By Contractor

The contractor must perform within the time fixed in the contract or an extension lawfully granted, and is liable for failure to do so unless the delay is excused or waived

Public necessity requires that highway contracts be prosecuted to completion promptly [83] The contract must generally be performed within the time fixed therein [84] or within the time of an extension lawfully granted, [85] otherwise the contractor may be held liable in damages for the delay [86] or, where provision therefor is made in the contract, it may be canceled after notice to the contractor [87] The judgment of the highway department that there has been unreasonable delay should not be lightly set aside by courts [88] Court orders granting an extension of time for the work and finally accepting it on its completion have the legal effect of vacating and abrogating prior orders adjudging the contractor in default [89] A provision that an extension beyond the date fixed for completion shall be on terms fixed by the highway department which may include a charge for engineering and inspection expenses does not mandatorily require such charges as a condition to granting an extension, but the power to impose such charges is discretionary and should not be exercised arbitrarily [90]

A substantial addition to the work added by a change order nullifies the provision in the original

sion of the engineer that certain work be performed without compensation, as being incidental to other work, will not prevent recovery therefor —McGillivray Const Co v Hoskins, 202 P 677, 54 Cal App 636 contract setting the time for completion, and, in the absence of an agreement by the contractor to complete by a certain date, he is entitled to a reasonable time in which to complete the entire work [91]

Excuse for delay A delay in completing the work may be excused when it is unavoidable [92] There is an implied promise in the contract that the engineer designated to supervise the contractor's work would do so in a manner which would not hinder the contractor in the performance of his obligations,[93] and, where the engineer arbitrarily hindered the contractor in the completion of the work, equity will not permit the state to withhold any part of the contract price, either as penalties or damages for delay [94] Furthermore, the state cannot avoid liability in an action to recover penalties thus withheld on the theory that the engineer's tortious acts were not chargeable to the state, and it is immaterial that the contract provided that the engineer's decisions on questions arising thereunder should be final [95] Where the delay was caused by the contractor's own acts, and cave-ins resulted from his incompetence, the fact that the work was stopped for a time by the state industrial accident commission does not make a statute excusing nonperformance or delay in performance applicable, nor is delay excused under the doctrine of impossibility of performance where the ground conditions encountered in the work were not vitally different from those which the contractor should reasonably have anticipated Where the contract commits to the judgment of the engineer the question of whether delays were unavoidable, the engineer's judgment can be impeached only for fraud or mistake so gross as to amount to fraud [96]

Waiver Where the supervising engineer acquiesces in the suspension of the work because of unfavorable weather conditions, this constitutes a waiver of a provision for liquidated damages on failure to complete the contract at a certain date [97] After a breach on the part of the contractor has occurred, the time of completion cannot be waived to the prejudice of taxpayers, even though an extension might have been granted had the contractor asked for it during the course of performance [98]

(2) By Public Agency

In the absence of consent or waiver, the contractor is entitled to recover compensatory damages for delay caused wholly by unwarranted action of the public agency

If a delay is caused wholly by unwarranted action of the highway commission the contractor is entitled to recover compensatory damages therefor,[99] and this right is not affected by constitutional

(4) Where landowners recovered judgment for trespass against construction company engaged in building a highway under contract with state on land staked out for that purpose by state engineer, and by injunction restrained company's operations under contract pending determination of title to land involved, construction company was entitled to recover from the state, which, although given notice of landowners' action, failed to come in and defend,

or statutory provisions forbidding the payment of extra compensation or forbidding payment of a claim under an illegal contract [1] So a contractor who is delayed in commencing work may nevertheless undertake it and complete within a period determined by the contract plus the time of the delay,[2] and he may then sue for damages occasioned by the original delay [3] A contractor is, however, obliged to take all reasonable means to minimize or obviate damage due to delay caused by wrongful acts of the state or highway officers [4] A contractor who was required by the engineer to do work outside the requirements of the contract is not entitled to damages for delays allegedly resulting from doing the extra work where such work did not unduly interfere with the progress of construction [5] Where the statute requires the execution of a formal written contract, the state may not be held liable for any delays prior to its execution, however inequitable the state's conduct might have been [6] If the state, in such case, unreasonably delays executing a written contract, the contractor is at liberty to withdraw his bid and recover his deposit, but, if he chooses to complete the contract after its execution, he cannot recover from the state on the theory of a quasi contract for additional expense incurred as a result of the delay,[7] the delay of the comptroller in approving the contract being a personal fault not chargeable to the state [8] The public agency may be relieved of responsibility for delay by express provision in the contract[9] or by consent of the contractor,[10] and the contractor may waive his claim for damages by entering into supplemental agreements after the contract has been fully performed and accepting the amount due thereunder without reserving his claim,[11] but the mere receipt by the contractor of the stipulated price for performance of the contract is not a waiver of his claim for damages for delay [12] The fact that the contract provides for extension of time where the delay is without fault of the contractor does not preclude his suit for damages where the delay was caused by the public body without right [13]

Interest or damages for delay Damages not based on direct consequences of the default are not recoverable [14] In an action for damages for delay in delivering the site of the highway, the contractor may recover the increased cost of labor and materials [15] A contractor suing for the balance due on the contract is not entitled to interest thereon in the absence of a statute or contract providing therefor,[16] or where no time is fixed by the contract for the payment of the claim for services,[17] but inter-

the damages caused by such delay the amount of judgment against company in landowners action, and the fair and reasonable compensation and disbursements of counsel employed by the company to defend such action —Madison County Const Co v State, supra

est may be recovered when authorized by statute,[18] or where there is a breach of an agreement to pay for everything furnished under the contract promptly on the completion and acceptance of the work[19] Where interest is recoverable on the amount due, it is properly computed from the date on which the work was accepted as completed[20] or when the amount was payable[21] Only simple, and not compound, interest on the amount of plaintiff's recovery is to be allowed[22]

d. Acceptance or Rejection of Work

Acceptance of the work by certain designated officers or boards is generally required as a condition precedent to payment, and their determination is conclusive in the absence of fraud

Where the contract or controlling statute provides for approval or acceptance of the work or certification of its completion by a designated officer or board, payment should be made only on acceptance of the work,[23] in accordance with the decision of the officer named,[24] but substantial compliance with the statutes setting forth the procedure for obtaining such approval is sufficient,[25] and after the statutory time for objecting has elapsed it is too late for a property owner to take advantage of any error which may have occurred in the course of the proceedings[26] The mere fact that the work was not performed strictly in the manner required by contract does not deprive the board of power to accept the highway where there has been substantial performance[27] The acceptance of the work is a judicial[28] or quasi-judicial[29] act, and, likewise in hearing remonstrances and ordering annulment of a former order approving the work, the board acts in a judicial capacity[30] The acceptance of the work is conclusive on all parties in the absence of fraud,[31] but it may be attacked for fraud by one who has not waived the fraud,[32] and an appeal may be taken when authorized by statute[33] In accepting the work, the board merely determines compliance with the contract by the contractor and carries into effect the result of its judgment[34] The acceptance on a false affidavit of the contractor that all claims of subcontractors and materialmen have been paid does not affect the rights of an unpaid materialman except to commence the running of the statutory period for proceeding against the surety on the contractor's bond,[35] and, where such materialman knew of the acceptance prior to the expiration of the statutory period but took no steps against the surety, he has no standing in equity to set aside the acceptance[36] Where the board has accepted the improvement and made payment so that there was nothing else for it to do, it has completed its function and cannot maintain suit in equity to va-

Approval, and payment during progress of the work may be deprived of the effect of an acceptance or waiver of a claim for damages for defective work by so providing in the contract,[38] but notwithstanding such a provision, acceptance of obviously defective work constitutes a waiver of damages therefor [39]

e. Extra Work or Compensation

Extra compensation cannot be allowed for work included in the contract, but the contractor may recover for the performance, under proper authority, of work which was not covered by the plans and specifications on which his bid was proposed, his right being determined by the provisions of the contract as originally made or lawfully modified

Extra compensation within a constitutional provision prohibiting the legislature from granting extra compensation to a contractor is compensation over and above that fixed by the contract for the work agreed to be done, and is in the nature of a gratuity [40] A highway contractor is legally and equitably bound to perform his contract for the consideration specified therein, however onerous the burden by reason of increased costs of labor and materials,[41] consequently, extra compensation cannot be allowed for work included in the contract,[42] and a contractor cannot recover for extras unless he shows that such work was not covered by the plans and specifications on which his bid was proposed [43] On the other hand the contractor may be entitled to compensation for extra work necessitated

Right of subcontractor to compensation for extra work see infra subdivision j (1) of this section

Necessity of understanding plans and specifications

As respects right to extra compensation a contractor for a highway project should thoroughly satisfy himself in detail as to the specifications and plans on file in the office of the highway department, and, if there be any doubt as to the interpretation or construction there should be a clarification before bids are submitted and contracts executed —Trinkle v Commonwealth, 196 S E 652, 170 Va 429

Risk of relying on preliminary estimate

Contractors bidding on highway contract, if relying on preliminary estimate showing percentage of earth and rock on contract site did so at their own risk, and could only require good faith on part of state, and when they were caused large additional expense because of unforeseen rock condition encountered in excavating, they were not entitled to additional compensation from state

Foreseeable expenses

(1) A highway contractor was not entitled to extra compensation for increased expense in excavating with labor instead of machinery, where contractor was paid for excavating on basis provided in contract, and by acts of the public agency,[44] such as changes in the plans and specifications,[45] work done to mitigate damages,[46] or extra work done or material furnished at the direction of properly authorized officers.[47] A statute authorizing the state highway commissioner to terminate contracts entered into before the war and authorizing awards to contractors for increased costs incurred in the completion of the contracts violates a constitutional provision forbidding the grant of any extra compensation to any public contractor.[48]

To be entitled to compensation for additional costs of the construction, the contractor must show a loss and a right to compensation therefor.[49] Thus, in order that compensation may be allowed for extra work, it must be provided for in a legal contract,[50] either in the original contract[51] or in a supplemental contract,[52] or authorized in writing condition necessitating labor could have been seen on examination of site—Sager v. State Highway Commission, 160 S.W.2d 757, 349 Mo. 341.

(2) Where sheets, on which were listed minimum highway construction wages paid in localities of proposed pavement, which were submitted to bidders together with specifications, expressly stated that listed wages were as of a certain date and further notified bidders that payment of higher wages might be necessary, successful bidder could not recover from highway commission amount it was compelled to pay for wages more than the listed minimum wages.—Cameron, Joyce & Co. v. State Highway Commission, Mo., 166 S.W.2d 458.

Smoothing of shoulders

Contract price for paving road was held to include smoothing of shoulders, hence smoothing of shoulders was not "extra work".—Moller & Roberts v. Harris County, Tex.Civ.App., 54 S.W.2d 213.

44. Utah.—Campbell Bldg. Co. v. State Road Commission, 70 P.2d 857, 95 Utah 242.
Wis.—McDonald v. State, 235 N.W. 1, 203 Wis. 649.

Breach of contract

(1) Where contract provided that contractor could secure all the fill necessary from a certain borrow, and such borrow failed to furnish sufficient earth fill, contractor was entitled to recover from the state the reasonable value of additional work and additional fill which contractor was required to purchase.—Manstin Engineering Corporation v. State, 21 N.Y.S.2d 169, 259 App.Div. 1096, affirmed 42 N.E.2d 747, 288 N.Y. 657.

(2) So assignee of contract had right to rely on state's contract that excavated earth could be used as fill, and hence was not precluded from recovering for removal of certain earth and bringing in of extra filling by reason of fact that assignor had looked over site of work before execution of contract.—Dolomite Products Co. v. State, 17 N.Y.S.2d 48, 258 App.Div. 294, affirming 13 N.Y.S.2d 10, reargument denied 18 N.Y.S.2d 752, 259 App.Div. 787, appeal denied.

45. Mo.—Spitcaufsky v. State Highway Commission of Missouri, 159 S.W.2d 647, 347 Mo. 117.

Arbitrary and capricious changes

The fact that contract provided that any alterations in plan not involving material changes should not constitute basis for claim for damages, did not preclude contractor's recovery for arbitrary and capricious material changes in plan on which the contractor had placed its bid which were made after work was commenced.—Davis Const. Co. v. State Highway Commission, Mo.App., 141 S.W.2d 214.

Actual change of plan

A provision in contract relating to material changes in original plans necessitated by exigencies of work resulting in unforeseen alterations of contractor's costs, meant actual changes of original plan and not a mere increase in grade or width requiring only more excavation.—Sager v. State Highway Commission, 160 S.W.2d 757, 349 Mo. 341.

Demurrage

Where state's representative prevented unloading of material for pavement and bridges from scows rented by contractor, but finally accepted the material for use nearby, contractor was entitled to additional compensation for demurrage on the scows.—Kniffin v. State, 12 N.Y.S.2d 422, 257 App.Div. 43, modified on other grounds 128 N.E.2d 853, 283 N.Y. 317, reargument denied 29 N.E.2d 668, 284 N.Y. 593, certiorari denied Kniffin v. Right to supplemental contract

In proposals for bids and in contract with low bidding contractor which provided for supplemental agreement for alterations in quantities involving increase or decrease of more than twenty-five per cent of "the total cost of the work calculated from the original proposal quantities and the contract unit prices," word 'original" related to "proposal quantities" and "contract unit prices" as against contention of contractor whose additional expense was allegedly over twenty-five per cent of total cost of work calculated from original proposal quantities, that word "original" related only to "proposal quantities".—Wussow v. State, 267 N.W. 56, 222 Wis. 118.

Resolution not spread on minutes

Road contractor is not precluded from recovering additional compensation for change of route because resolution providing for supplemental contract was not spread on minutes of county commissioners.—London v. Board of Com'rs for Yancey County, 136 S.E. 356, 193 N.C. 100.

Incidental changes

Road contract, providing that extra work or extra materials fur-

by the proper authorities,[53] and the right to such compensation is determined by the provisions of the contract as originally made or as lawfully modified.[54] The authority to perform such work must be given in the manner and in accordance with the terms of the contract,[55] and a state engineer has no authority to waive on behalf of the state a requirement of the original contract that extra work, before it can be paid for, must have been authorized by a written work order.[56] The fact that the engineer and the county highway committee were frequently on the work and could have seen that more work was being done than was required by the plans and specifications did not give rise to an implied agreement on the part of the county committee to pay for such extra work which the contractor did without requiring a written order signed, as required by the contract.[57] A contract providing that a fair and equitable sum be agreed on in writing before changes productive of increased cost to the contractor be begun does not require that the writing be signed by the contracting parties, and a written order of the engineer authorized or ratified is sufficient.[58] A contract requiring the contractor to do such additional work as might be necessary in the engineer's opinion to complete the improvement planned does not authorize the engineer, by issuing extra work orders, to change the improvement or plan set forth in the contract.[59] A contractor may be estopped from recovering for changed work on a basis other than that stipulated in the change order.[60] Where, at the request of the contractor a change is made in the course of the road subsequent to executing the contract, which change results in the expenditure of more money than was originally estimated by the contractor, he is estopped from claiming payment for extra work performed by reason of such change.[61] A contractor is not precluded, however, from recovering for extra work performed by a subcontractor by the fact that he had paid the subcontractor only what he had received from the public agency for performance of the subcontractor's part of the contract.[62] The use of the improved way by the public or the implied acceptance of the work by the payment of the sums due under the contract does

nished shall be covered by supplemental contract approved as required by statute merely requires supplemental contract where original contract was modified and does not apply to incidental changes—Kent Const Co v State, 208 N Y S 534, 212 App Div 197

(3) But where contract provided that authorized alterations would be indorsed on approved plans or shown on supplementary sheets, but work was performed in accordance with changes made orally or by means of oral or written instructions of the engineer the variation was a "deviation" from the contract rather than an "abrogation" thereof within the rule that although deviations do not necessarily cause a failure of performance or an abrogation they may entitle the parties to extra compensation or damages—Nevland v State, Tex Civ App, 151 S W 2d 331, error dismissed judgment correct

54. Basis for recovery

Highway contractor's remedy for damages from delay and extra work occasioned by state's change in plans was held under contract to be action for services, if change exceeded twenty per cent, and not for damages for delay—Cunningham v State, 182 N E 95, 95 Ind App 434

Held not "extra work" within contract

Where a contract provided that the contractor's compensation was to be determined on a fixed unit price basis, and the engineer during the course of construction made substantial changes in the route which greatly increased the expense of construction because of the increased rock excavation of a harder formation required a provision that all alterations and changes in plans and specifications should be classed as "extra work" to be paid on a cost plus basis where not covered by the various unit prices, did not give the contractor the right to compensation on the cost plus basis for such changes merely because of the increased cost where all of the work done was covered by the unit prices, as such work could only be classed as extra work, if not covered by the unit prices—Greenlee County v Webster, 215 P 161, 25 Ariz 183

not of itself constitute an acceptance of material or labor furnished outside the contract without authority [63] Where the contract provided that acceptance of work or part payment would not operate as a waiver of the contract or any power reserved therein, approval of estimates subsequent to a modification of the contract did not estop the district from denying that the contractor had reorganized his forces so as to be entitled to additional payment for work previously done [64]

Where no agreement is made regarding the price thereof, or payment therefor, the law implies an agreement to pay the reasonable value of the extra work,[65] but where the contract fixes a certain rate of payment it is unnecessary to resort to proof of the reasonable value of the work [66] Since it would be inequitable to compel a contractor to do extra work and not pay for it,[67] one required to do more than the contract calls for has the right to continue under protest and recover the value of the extra work on a quantum meruit as the measure of damages for the breach of contract,[68] and although the contract provides for compensation for extra work on a cost plus basis, in the absence of a written order therefor which is required by the contract, the contractor can recover only the reasonable value of the labor and materials furnished [69]

f. Deductions

Reasonable deductions from the contract price should be made if authorized changes have materially lessened the amount and cost of the work required by the original contract

The public agency is entitled to a reasonable deduction from the contract price, if changes made by authority or consent have materially lessened the amount and cost of the work required by the original contract,[70] and such deduction should be made at the contract rate for the work omitted, so far as practicable [71]

g. Assignment of Moneys Due or To Become Due

Moneys due or to become due to the contractor may be validly assigned, but the assignment must conform to statutory requirements, and the assignee takes subject to all conditions of the contract and prior assignments

Moneys due and to become due under a highway construction contract may be validly assigned [72] An assignment of moneys due creates no lien, according to one view,[73] although there is authority holding that a written assignment of funds to be paid operates as an equitable assignment and effects the transfer of title in the funds to the assignee when they become due and owing to the assignor [74] The assignee is bound to take notice of

Work done by subcontractor

Under highway construction contracts, county was held to have become indebted to contractor for work done by subcontractor the moment subcontractor's work was performed, and hence contractor's assignment to subcontractor of money due under contracts assigned right thereto even though payment was not then due and contractor's surety was thereafter forced to complete work under contracts.—Indiana Truck Co. v. Right to pay claims

Stark, 129 S.E. 81, 132 S.C. 171.

(2) Where the contract authorizes the withholding of a specified percentage of the contract price to pay claims filed with the public agency, the contractor cannot give his assignee, who had not filed his claim, any right to such reserved funds if the claims properly filed were more than sufficient to exhaust the fund.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Right to complete work

Where county had right under contract to withhold compensation to be paid for proposed improvement, and, if abandoned by contractor, to use any money due or to become due thereon to complete work that was left undone, contractor could not make any assignment of any funds due to him at time of abandonment that would affect county's right to use funds in payment of expenses of completing work.—Castro v. contractor defaulted and the work was completed by his surety were covered by the contractor's assignment of moneys due and to become due the contractor for advances made by the assignee with the surety's consent, as against the contention of the surety that because of the contractor's default the contractor never became entitled to the retained percentages, the right of the government not being involved [86]

The acceptance of an assignment by the public agency gives rise to an independent contract between the agency and the assignee obligating the former to pay the latter and cutting off defenses of the agency against the contractor, but to be effective as such, the acceptance must have been clearly intended, it must be more than a mere acknowledgment of notice of the assignment, and it must have been made by one having authority to bind the agency [87]

Priorities In the absence of statutes providing otherwise, priorities among assignees depend on the date of assignment,[88] but consent by a prior assignee to a subsequent assignment may estop him to set up his assignment as against that of the subsequent assignee,[89] and it has been held that a subsequent assignee showing that funds loaned or advanced by him were used in the actual construction of the road is entitled to a priority over other assignees [90]

In the absence of contract or statute providing otherwise,[91] assignees under a valid common-law assignment of money due or to become due under the contract have rights superior to those of labor and material claimants having neither a prior nor subsequent valid lien,[92] although it has been held that a laborer or materialman who presents his claim in time is entitled to payment out of funds due the contractor in preference to the assignee of such contractor [93] The rights of the assignee as against laborers and materialmen may be waived [94]

The equitable lien of the assignee of money to become due under the contract is superior to the Acceptance held not binding

Highway contractor's orders on county in favor of materialmen were not binding on county and could not be made binding by commissioners' acceptance thereof or by entry of order on minutes of county board, although such orders were held not objectionable on the ground that the county commissioners were stockholders in materialmen, since the purchases involved were made by the contractor, not by the county officer—Eatonton Oil & Auto Co v Greene County, 185 S E 296, 53 Ga. 91. Proviso required by highway commission

Under statutes conferring broad powers of regulation, the state highway commission properly refused a road contractor's absolute assignment of money to become due from state and required a proviso excepting claims for labor and material from assignment, and hence assignee's claim was subject to a claim for board furnished contractor's employees, although assignee had no knowledge of proviso because of fault of party representing contractor—Bank of California Nat Ass'n v Scott, 78 P 2d 342, 159 Or 70

Under a statute constituting moneys paid to, or to become due to, the contractor a trust fund in the hands of the contractor, for the protection of persons who furnish services or materials, in order to enable the contractor to carry out his contract, the contractor cannot by assignment release funds in the hands of the public agency from the obligation to pay claims of laborers and materialmen which, although not lienable, are classified as "related claims"—Morris F Fox & Co v State, 281 N. Unaccepted order to pay materialman

Where the contract authorizes the town to retain moneys due thereunder until labor and material claims are settled, the contractor has no right to the moneys retained until settlement of the claims, and an order of the contractor directing the town treasurer to pay a materialman, which is not accepted by the town gives the materialman no greater right to the money than the contractor had—Inhabitants of Town of Newbury v Lincoln, 177 N E 614, 276 Mass 445

claim of a general creditor [95] Under a statute giving an assignment precedence of liens subsequently filed, the assignee of moneys due under the contract, when brought into court at the suit of lienors, is on a parity with them in respect of the remedies available, even though the contractor, unlike materialmen and laborers, is not a lienor under the statute,[96] and the assignee acquires an interest superior to subsequent lienors,[97] the order of priority being determined by the order of the filing of the liens and assignment [98] A statute providing that liens against the state shall be enforced in the same manner as mechanics' liens generally means that there shall be cross-remedies between defendants claiming derivative interests in the fund by succession to the contractor [99] Where the statute gives the assignee priority only to the extent of advances made on such assignment before the filing of the notice of lien or assignment next subsequent to his assignment, a prior assignee is precluded from claiming priority over liens subsequently filed to the extent that his advances were made after the filing of subsequent liens or assignments [1] Parties to whom the contractor assigned moneys earned under the contract for debts accruing before the assignments, cannot be treated as lienors, such prior debts not being advances on the assignments within the statute [2] A materialman who has an equitable lien on the money retained is entitled to be paid therefrom on default of the contractor in preference to a creditor who, on completion of the work, has obtained from the contractor an assignment of a part of the fund to pay for money loaned the contractor to be used by him in performing the contract [3]

Under a contract authorizing the state to apply any money due or to become due to the completion of the work, earned moneys in the hands of the state on default of the contractor are not due or payable to the contractor, and the right of the state to apply them to the completion of the contract is superior to the rights of an assignee of the contractor [4]

Order of payment
Creditors of a road district are paid from the district's funds in the order of the execution of the contracts under which debts arise, and when one makes a contract for work on the roads of a district, he at once acquires a vested interest in the district's funds to the full extent of his contract, and the commissioners' court has no power to impair such right by paying out the funds to sub-contractor files a complicated claim for compensation and expenses, the highway commission must thoroughly audit the claim and allow it in such part as is found to be correct,[6] and if any part is disallowed, the reason for disallowance should be set forth in detail.[7] An order making an allowance must conform to the statutory requirements[8] and is void if it fails to do so.[9] The mere fact that claims allowed were not itemized or verified does not establish fraud in allowance.[10] Where a voucher for an excessive amount is issued, refusal to issue a warrant is proper.[11] Warrants issued without any compliance with the controlling statutes are void.[12] The right to a hearing on an appeal from disallowance of a claim is not defeated by the fact that the proceeds of bonds for the improvement were exhausted before the claim was filed.[13] The contractor cannot disregard a clause requiring arbitration and present his claim as an ordinary creditor.[14] In the absence of a lien or contractual authority for so doing, the county has no right to withhold, for the purpose of paying claims of laborers, materialmen, or subcontractors, payments required by the contract to be made to the contractor.[15] Funds owing to the contractor which were retained by order of the county board for the benefit of the persons legally entitled thereto cannot be paid out except with the consent of the contractor or his assignee, or pursuant to a decree barring the contractor from demanding payment thereof again by the board.[16]

Under a statute authorizing an action against the highway commissioner for the recovery of specified claims so far as they may be judicially determined to be legal claims against the highway fund, before the amounts appropriated may be paid there must be a judicial determination of liability therefor.[17]

Submission to arbitration A statute providing for submission of controversies arising out of any contract for construction or repair of highways to arbitration is inapplicable where the contract is void.[18] No right to institute proceedings under such a statute with respect to a claim for damages for delay arises until the work covered by the contract has been completed and accepted,[19] and no arbitration proceedings may be had unless commenced within the time limited by the statute.[20] The statutory period cannot be extended by the highway commission,[21] and the court has no jurisdiction to enter judgment on an award of arbitrators to whom the controversy was submitted by agreement, although the proceedings were not instituted within the statutory period.[22] Where the contract provides for arbitration of disputes, and a dispute arises regarding disallowance of the contractor's claim, the highway commission, on demand of the contractor, must submit the question to arbitration and accord the contractor a full and fair hearing thereon.[23] A conclusive arbitration clause in the contract prevents further action by claimant after an adverse decision of the arbitrators.[24]

(2) Effect of Payment

The obligation under a contract is discharged by payment in full or by a valid settlement, but acceptance of an amount less than that due does not of itself release the public agency from further obligations

The obligation or indebtedness under the contract is discharged by payment in full in the medium provided for in the contract[25] or by a valid settlement.[26] Payment to the contractors under a contract prohibiting assignment of any money payable thereunder after notification of an assignment operates as a discharge, notwithstanding the assignment.[27] A settlement without undue influence, fraud, or mistake is not subject to attack by one of the parties thereto,[28] and where the county supervisors and expert engineers consider the specifications of the contract as understandable and definite, the act of the board in approving, accepting, and paying for the work done thereunder should not be disturbed by the court on the ground that the specifications were not sufficiently definite.[29] Acceptance of an amount less than the final estimate does not release the public agency under a contract providing that payment of the final estimate releases it from further obligations.[30] A release of all claims against the state, signed by a federal aid highway contractor, has been construed as not a release in full but as contemplating payment, by the federal government, of the balance claimed.[31]

Amounts wrongfully paid to an assignee of the contractor cannot be deducted from the amount due a surety completing the work on the contractor's abandonment.[32]

i. Rescission or Abandonment

A contractor may rescind or abandon the contract for failure of the highway district to comply therewith in a matter going to the substance of the contract.

The contractor may rescind or abandon the contract for failure of the highway district to comply therewith in a matter going to the substance of the contract.[33] Thus a contractor has a right to refuse to proceed with the performance of his contract where he is authorized by the contract to do so because of a delay not due to his fault,[34] where he has been wrongfully prevented from completing his contract,[35] or where he is required to do more than the contract calls for,[36] although it has been held that the mere fact that the contractor was required to put dirt on the highway not called for in the contract did not abrogate it.[37] Refusal to make payments as they come due under the contract absolves the contractors from further performance,[38] but a withholding of certain sums due under the contract is not a breach authorizing rescission or abandonment where the contractor had received on other estimates more than he was entitled to even including the balance withheld[39] A contractor is not released from his contract by the fact that the public agency, in ordering suspension of work under other contracts, mistakenly used language including his contract where the mistake was corrected before he changed his situation in any way[40] In the absence of a mandatory statute requiring the county board to acquire the right of way prior to the letting of the contract, the contractor is not entitled to abandon work or rescind the contract for failure to provide a right of way without giving the county a reasonable opportunity to make good[41]

(a) Subcontractors

A subcontractor is liable to the principal contractor for breach of the subcontract, but where he has fully or substantially performed, he may, in a proper case, recover from the principal contractor, from the public agency, from another subcontractor, or out of funds retained for his benefit, the amount due him under the subcontract or damages for its breach.

A subcontractor has implied authority to do what is reasonably necessary and incidental to the work committed to him,[42] but he is bound by the terms of the subcontract[43] and liable for a breach thereof,[44] nor is his liability affected by the terms of the principal contractor's bond.[45] Where no demand was made on the subcontractor to remedy the defects, and a substantial sum had been paid him in compromise of all matters in controversy between the parties, the contractor cannot claim damages for defects in work performed by the subcontractor,[46] and he cannot recover the excess cost of completing the work on the subcontractor's default where he has not given the notice required by the subcontract[47]

The subcontractor is bound to take notice of rights under the principal contract incorporated in the subcontract by reference,[48] and cannot claim the benefits of a clause in the contract between the

Suspension of work

Where the subcontract incorporates by reference the original contract, plans, and specifications and makes them binding on the subcontractor the latter and his assignee are bound by provisions in the specifications for suspension of work on account of unsuitable conditions—Browne & Billings v Rouse & Hely Const Co 253 S W 7, 159 Ark 677

Change in plans

Provisions in a contract which were incorporated in the subcontract and which required changes in plans to be written and signed by the engineer in order to entitle the contractor to extra compensation are intended to protect the state against any unwarranted claims of the contractor, and are not available to the subcontractor against the principal contractor Such provisions may be waived or modified by oral contract, and a subcontractor who continued work after changes in the route and accepted payments on the basis of unit prices in the original contract and compensation for loss of time while the changes were being made was bound by the changes, even though they were not made in the manner required by the contract, and could not, on the theory of breach of contract, recover from the original contractor for loss of anticipated contractor and the district without being subject to its restrictions [49] A provision in the contract between the subcontractor and the general contractor that decisions of the state highway commission on any question connected with the execution of the contract should be final does not deprive the subcontractor of the right to a judicial determination of the compensation to which he is entitled, however [50] Where, on the subcontractor's failure to perform, the contractor informed the subcontractor that he had taken charge of the work himself and intended to charge the cost thereof to the subcontractor, who acquiesced therein, this constituted a new contract by which both parties are bound [51] One to whom the contract has been sublet contrary to the regulations of the highway department is charged with all knowledge which could properly be charged against the contractor who sublet the contract [52] A provision in the principal contract requiring written consent to a subcontract may be waived, however [53]

A subcontractor who has performed his contract in accordance with its terms is entitled to payment from the principal contractor of the amount due him,[54] and the contractor cannot escape liability because no allowance was made to him by the district for the work, where he is entitled to credit for it in his settlement with the district [55] Where the subcontractor discontinues the work because of the contractor's default in not furnishing materials promptly, as required by contract, he is entitled to be paid for the work actually done under the contract,[56] and the contractor has the right to be credited for the payments made to the subcontractor and for materials used by him [57] So the contractor is entitled to an allowance on the amount due from him to the subcontractor for damages caused by breach of the subcontract,[58] although such breach does not entitle him to avoid liability for the work performed by the subcontractor and accepted by the contractor [59] If damage to a road partly constructed by a subcontractor is such as is required to be repaired at the expense of the district, as where it was caused by unusually heavy rains, the principal contractor is not entitled to credit on the account due the subcontractor for the expense of making such repairs [60] Subcontractors who fail to perform their subcontracts cannot recover on them[61] or on quantum meruit [62]

Basis of recovery

A subcontractor who was to be paid for full amount of yardage for unclassified excavation as shown in the final estimate allowed by the state highway department, but who was to be paid only for quantity of work performed was entitled to payment for only such yardage as he actually did up to the limiting figures in the highway department's final estimate—Wunderlich v National Surety Corporation, D C Minn, 24 F Supp 640, reversed on other grounds, C C A, National Surety Corporation v Wunderlich, 111 F 2d 622

Filing of claim

Where highway had been completed and accepted and highway commission had paid balance of purchase price into registry of the court, assertion of subcontractor's claim to payment, by preference out of such fund, to contractor's claims was timely, although not filed until after lapse of forty-five days after acceptance of the work—Goldberg v Banta Bros, 162 So 786, 183 La 10

cipal contractor and retained under the contract until completion of the work, where it appears that the work has been completed and that the district has no claim against the contractor. A subcontractor of an insolvent contractor, who failed to finish his contract, is not, however, entitled to be paid from the retained amount until the roads covered by the contract have been completed,[65] and the fact that the subcontractor furnished labor and materials does not give rise to an equitable claim to sums retained by the public agency under the contract with the original contractor as security for completion of the entire work.[66] Acceptance by the public agency of a refunding bond and release of the retained funds to the contractor, pursuant to statutory authority therefor, absolves such agency from liability for claims of a subcontractor against the retained funds.[67]

The subcontractor may also sue the principal contractor for damages for an abandonment or breach of the subcontract,[68] but the subcontractor, suing for breach of an agreement to reimburse him for expenses, cannot recover payments contrary to public policy.[69] The contractor is not liable to the subcontractor for delays caused by third persons,[70] particularly where the contract expressly relieves him from liability for such delay.[71] A subcontractor who proceeds with his work without the approval of the engineer knowing that such approval is required by the principal contract merely has the right to proceed so long as the engineer does not object,[72] and on demand of the engineer that the principal contractor take over and complete the work himself, the subcontractor is not entitled to recover against the principal contractor for loss of future profits.[73]

Where a contractor's work has been stopped by a breach of the contract by the road district, a subcontractor is entitled, according to one view, to recover loss of anticipated profits from the district[74] but not from the contractor;[75] but there is authority directly to the contrary holding that the district is not liable even though it consented to the subcontract.[76] Where a subcontractor performed work under the supervision of the engineer for which the district received the benefit, and for which he was not paid and for which the district did not pay the principal contractor, the district is liable to the subcontractor on a quantum meruit,[77] and may turn over to him the proceeds of a certified check which the principal contractor had deposited with the district pending the delivery of a bond which was never delivered.[78] The state is liable to the subcontractor for material owned by the latter and appropriated by the state, notwithstanding the state paid the principal contractor, the contractor having defaulted and become a bankrupt without paying the subcontractor.[79]

A subcontractor of a subcontractor who has faithfully performed his contract is entitled to recover

Damages and interest

(1) Judgment for subcontractor for agreed price less cost of hauling and spreading gravel he would have hauled and spread before quitting, had contractor furnished material as agreed was held not erroneous, as allowing profits on entire contract, or prejudicial to the contractor, and the fact that subcontractor was to pay two of four truck drivers the full amount per yard mile payable to him for hauling and spreading gravel did not limit his recovery against the contractor, failing to furnish materials, to one half of amount awarded.—Bracken v. Dahle, 251 P. 16, 68 Utah 486

from the latter his retained percentage after the state has finally settled with the original contractor, although the original contractor has not settled with defendant.[80]

Substantial performance. Where the work done by the subcontractor is done substantially in compliance with the subcontract, he is entitled to recover the contract price less the fair cost of remedying any defects in the work.[81]

Extra work and compensation The subcontractor is entitled to an allowance for extra work made necessary by acts of the contractor,[82] and even though he did not complete the subcontract he may recover for work done outside the contract on quantum meruit [83]

(b) Materialmen and Laborers

A laborer or materialman is entitled to recover the amount due him from the contractor to whom he supplied the labor or furnished the material, and under some circumstances he may recover from the public agency contracting for the highway improvement, or out of funds owing to the contractor, and by statute or contract the principal contractor may be liable to creditors of a subcontractor

A person who has performed labor for, or furnished material to, a highway contractor generally has a cause of action against the contractor for the amount due him,[84] and where a subcontractor assumes the contractor's obligation for labor and materials, each is bound in solido for the amounts for which each may be liable personally [85] The public agency cannot defeat claims of laborers and materialmen by arbitrarily refusing to sell road bonds.[86] Claims for labor and material furnished the contractor may be assigned [87] A mere contract provision that the amount paid the contractor included payment for labor and material does not show an intention to compel payment to those who furnish materials [88]

The public agency is not liable to a materialman for materials furnished the contractor which were incorporated into the highway accepted by such agency,[89] but under some statutes requiring the contractor to pay claims of laborers and materialmen, the state is authorized to pay them if the contractor does not [90]

Claims of laborers and materialmen are payable out of the funds owing to the contractor and retained by the public agency pending completion of the work, under the provisions of some statutes[91]

(2) General state highway contractor is not entitled to any payment out of highway contract proceeds which might impair rights of persons for whose benefit statutory trust in proceeds was created—Leonard D Sylvester, Inc, v Giovannone Const Co, supra

Nonlienable claims

The term "claim" as used in statutes dealing with "claims" against moneys due highway contractors from the state, is more comprehensive than "lien" and includes nonlienable items so long as they are germane to performing contracts on public work—Morris F Fox & Co v State 281 N W 666 229 Wis 44

Filing of claims

(1) If under the provisions of the statute claims must be filed by the laborer or materialman with a designated officer within a specified time, the public authority is not liable to one who has not complied with the statute, and where the statute further provides that any claimant may sue on the claim within a designated time it refers to claimant who has complied with the statute by giving proper notice—Equitable Casualty & Surety Co v Jackson 44 S W 2d 899, 163 Tenn 54

(2) Claimants not filing claims with state auditor within statutory period are not entitled to retained portion of highway contract price, and where no claims have been filed within the statutory period, retained portion loses its identity as such, and claimants are entitled only to balance of contract price remaining after work has been completed—Southern Surety Co v Jenner Bros, 247 N W 500, 212 Iowa 1027

(3) Act setting time limit of six months from completion of work for presenting claims for material and labor furnished highway contractor was held prospective and inapplicable since highway construction was completed when work was done and not when final estimate was made—Overman & Co v Maryland and contracts,[92] and in some jurisdictions it is held that laborers and materialmen have an equitable right to payment from such funds in preference to general creditors,[93] and that a statutory requirement of a bond to protect them is not inconsistent with such equitable right,[94] although there is authority to the effect that in the absence of a controlling statute or provision in the contract for the creation of a trust fund for their benefit, laborers and materialmen have no right to recover such retained funds as against the public authority taking over the contract and completing the work in accordance with express provision therefor in the contract.[95] Filing a transcript of a judgment against the con-

(4) Where the highway has been completed and accepted, the assertion of a claim to payment out of funds owing to the contractor and retained by the highway commission or deposited in court is timely whether filed within or after the period fixed by statute therefor—Goldberg v. Banta Bros., 162 So. 786, 183 La. 10—R. B. Tyler Co. v. Merrill Engineering Co., 159 So. 319, 181 La. 191

(5) A statute designating the officer with whom claims are to be filed must be strictly construed—Missouri Gravel Co. v. Federal Surety Co., 237 N.W. 635, 212 Iowa 1322

(6) Under statute requiring claims to be filed with public officer through whom payment is to be made subcontractor's claim for materials furnished in construction of road should be filed with county auditor. Fuller & Hiller Hardware Co. v. Shannon & Willfong, 215 N.W. 611, 205 Iowa 104

(7) Under statute requiring filing of claims with the officer authorized by law to issue warrants in payment of the improvement, claims for material and labor furnished for primary road construction under contracts made by state highway commission should not be filed with county auditor or state highway commission, but should be filed with state auditor—Missouri Gravel Co. v. Federal Surety Co., supra—Southern Surety Co. v. Jenner Bros., 237 N.W. 500, 212 Iowa 1027

(8) The provision as to notice contained in Acts 1899 c. 182, Thompson Shannon Code § 1135a et seq. was impliedly repealed by Acts 1917 c. 74, and under the later statute public officers must take the initiative and advertise for claims against general contractor before making final settlement, and notice of such claims is not due to be filed until after such advertisement is made—Southern Const. Co. v. Halliburton, 258 S.W. 409, 149 Tenn. 319

Priority

(1) Distribution of highway contract price retained should be made for court costs including attorneys' fees, for labor claims in order filed, and for material demands in order filed—Southern Surety Co. v. Jenner Bros., 237 N.W. 500, 212 Iowa 1027.

(2) Claims of those who have furnished services or materials in order to enable a contractor to carry out his public contract, where related but not lienable, have priority over totally unrelated claims, and where there were in existence, to the knowledge of the state highway commission, claims of the former class, contractor's creditor's claim, which arose out of purchase of securities by contractor and which was not related to highway improvement, was not payable out of the fund in the commission's hands when project was completed, or until such time as all related claims and expenses had been paid—Morris F. Fox & Co. v. State, 281 N.W. 666, 229 Wis. 44

Title to retained funds

Under Tennessee law, money retained by Tennessee highway commissioner from payments to highway contractor for unsatisfied laborers and materialmen was property of state and was in custody of state until such time as it should be determined that there was a surplus belonging to contractor—Dannel v. Wilson-Weesner-Wilkinson Co., C.C.A.Tenn., 109 F.2d 364

Claim for rent of power shovel to highway subcontractor was held payable from highway contract proceeds as claim for "implements or machinery" used or consumed in construction, although there was no showing that contractor's bond complied with requirements of newly adopted statute for protection of those furnishing "implements or machinery"—Leonard D. Sylvester, Inc., v. Giovannone Const. Co., 174 A. 582, 116 N.J.Eq. 515

Interest is not paid to fund retained for laborers and materialmen, and where portion of highway contract price retained was insufficient to pay all claims court properly denied interest—Southern Surety Co. v. Jenner Bros., 237 N.W. 500, 212 Iowa 1027

In California, Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, requiring owner to withhold amount due contractor on service of stop notice, and making fund withheld subject to claims of laborers and materialmen by whom notice was given, is inapplicable to claims of laborers and materialmen against contractor constructing a public highway, who is required to give bond under St. 1919 p. 487—McMorry v. Claims not within bond

Creditors who furnished material and rented equipment to contractor were held entitled to pro rata share of fund retained by state highway commission until road was accepted although their claims were not within the terms of the bond of the contractor's surety—U.S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Macksville Gravel Co., 150 N.E. 390, 84 Ind.App. 129

Effect of cancellation of contract

Materialman's right to recover for materials used in highway project cannot be defeated by cancellation without his knowledge of contract between original contractor and person contracting to furnish materials—Pigeon Thomas Iron Co. v. Drew Bros., 111 So. 182, 162 La. 836

Subcontractors on other contracts

That bridge work was partly financed by money from other contracts after subcontractors on such contracts had receipted without payment for sums due them did not entitle subcontractors' claims to priority over those of laborers and materialmen as respected funds retained by state roads commission under completed bridge contracts, in absence of any assignments to subcontractors of proceeds of such contracts—Carney v. U.S. Guarantee Co., 177 A. 157, 168 Md. 134

tractor is a sufficient basis for payment to the judgment creditor of moneys owed the contractor, under a statute authorizing payment by the state to the judgment creditor on the filing of a certified copy of the judgment [96]

Liability of principal contractor to creditors of subcontractor Generally the liability of the principal contractor to the subcontractor determines the right of the latter's laborer to recover from the fund due the former [97] In the absence of an applicable statute or contract, the contractor is not liable to persons dealing with a subcontractor,[98] nor is he made liable by his failure to exact a bond which the statute does not require him to exact from such subcontractor [99] It has been said that one dealing with a subcontractor can claim rights against the principal contractor only under the Lien Law, which gives to laborers and materialmen dealing with the subcontractor the necessary contractual relationship or privity of contract between them and the principal contractor,[1] but the contractor may also be liable by reason of a promise, supported by consideration, to pay the claim,[2] and liability of the contractor may be fixed by his contract with the public agency,[3] as where that contract makes the subcontractor the agent of the contractor[4] or provides that the contractor pay promptly for all work and labor done and material used in the work,[5] although a claimant is not entitled to the benefit of such a provision where his claim is not included within its terms [6] Where the laborer constitutes the subcontractor his agent in the collection of his wages, payment to the subcontractor releases the general contractor [7] A statute imposing liability on the original contractor for material and labor furnished includes material and labor furnished to a subcontractor [8]

(2) Liens

Although, in the absence of statute or contract providing therefor, no lien exists for labor and material furnished in the construction and improvement of a highway, such a lien is given, under some statutes, on the money due the contractor, but it may be claimed only for labor or materials which come within the terms of the statute, and may be waived by the creditor.

The construction of roads is a public work, and laborers and materialmen have no lien for labor and material furnished,[9] unless expressly given by statute[10] or contract,[11] but are simple contract credi-

Applicability of statute
The Ohio supreme court having declared statute providing for establishment of liens on public funds for materials and labor applicable to state highway construction contracts, such contracts were included from effective date of statute, so that materialmen and laborers failing to file claims with director of highways as provided by statute have no liens against amount due contractor, although Ohio court of appeals had declared statute inapplicable to such contracts at time within which liens should have been perfected —In re Gilmore, D C Ohio, 28 F Supp 1010

(2) Where statute authorizing filing of lien claim with highway department did not specifically designate its contents, court would exercise liberality respecting form thereof, and bank's lien claim showing advancements to subcontractor to pay laborers and materialmen was held sufficient, although not reciting that bank was subcontractor's assignee and subrogee —Southern Surety Co of New York v First State Bank of Marquez, Tex Civ App, 54 S W 2d 888, error refused such statutes should be construed strictly[18] or liberally, to accomplish their end without doing violence to the language used[19] The lien being a right of subrogation to the contractor's cause of action rather than a lien on a specific res in the possession of the state, enforceability of liens on funds due the contractor is not affected because they exceed, in the aggregate, moneys in the state treasury appropriated to the contract[20] Where the statute provides for the withholding of sufficient sums to pay claims in case they are established by judgment, a contractor who becomes dissatisfied with the procrastination of claimant may himself have the claim adjudicated[21]

A lien may be claimed only for labor or materials which come within the terms of the statute[22] as

"in the construction"[28] or material furnished "to be used or consumed in making such public improvement."[29] If such things are entirely consumed in the course of construction, although they do not become a physical part of the finished product, they are "supplies" within a statute giving a lien to furnishers of "supplies"[30] The right to a lien is not lost because the contractor without the knowledge or consent of the materialman diverts the material to some other purpose,[31] but there can be no lien with respect to material delivered to the contractor but retaken by the materialman under an agreement with the contractor before it was used[32] Liens for work and material furnished prior to abandonment of the contract attach only to moneys due the original contractor,[33] and forfeiture of the contract does not impair the lien,[34] even though the cost of completing it exceeded the price fixed by the original contract[35] Money spent by the state in protecting the work done after the contractor's default is not deductible from the balance due the contractor in computing the fund available for liens[36] Lienors of a defaulting contractor are not entitled to money saved by the state in reletting the contract after default[37]

A statute creating an equitable lien on the proceeds of a highway contract in the hands of the contractor has been held to secure only claims on which the contractor is liable by reason either of an express contract to pay or of action taken by claimant under a statute requiring the contractor's bond to contain a condition for their benefit,[38] and parties furnishing labor or material to a subcontractor but failing to take action under the latter statute are not entitled to a lien on the contract price in the contractor's hands[39] Moreover the statute gives a lien only for labor or materials furnished after it took effect[40] The statutory lien of a subcontractor's assignee is subject to reduction to the extent of claims of the subcontractor's materialmen and laborers, which are a prior charge on that part of the fund which would otherwise go to the subcontractor[41]

A claimant who furnished material or labor to a subcontractor is entitled to a lien against the unpaid balance due the principal contractor under the provisions of some statutes[42] So an act creating a lien in favor of any persons who furnish material or labor to contractors who contract for public improvements applies to those furnishing material or labor to subcontractors, and accordingly such materialmen or laborers may enforce their lien on funds due the original contractor[43] to the extent of any unpaid balance due the subcontractor,[44] and likewise a subcontractor can fix a lien on the funds due the original contractor for labor and materials furnished by such subcontractor,[45] but a materialman who furnishes material to another materialman supplying material to the contractor is not entitled under the statute to a lien on the money due the contractor.[46] A subcontractor paying laborers and materialmen and perfecting his lien under such a statute may assign the lien,[47] and, where he has obtained advances from a bank for laborers and materialmen and assigned to the bank funds due him from the contractor and subrogated the bank to his rights, the bank, as assignee, can perfect the lien,[48] but, in the absence of an assignment of his lien or an agreement that the bank should be subrogated to his rights, the bank is not entitled to a lien.[49]

Where a special fund was set aside by court order for the benefit of lienors, other lienors who filed subsequently to the time when such fund was set aside were not entitled to any part of it.[50] Under a contract authorizing the state to apply any money due or to become due to the completion of the work, earned moneys in the hands of the state on default of the contractor are not due or payable to the contractor, and the right of the state to apply them to the completion of the contract is superior to the rights of parties filing liens for labor and materials.[51] Priorities as between lien claimants and assignees of moneys due or to become due under the contract are treated supra subdivision g of this section.

Waiver or discharge. A lien may be released[52] or waived[53] by the creditor, and, as shown infra § 210, it may be discharged, under statutes so providing, by the execution of a bond or undertaking for the purpose. The mere fact that a lien has been filed does not preclude the lienor and the contractor from compromising, settling, or adjusting the claim or extending the time of payment without consent of the custodian of the fund.[54]

a. In General

On the letting of a contract for road work the highway authorities may require a bond of the contractor

Where a board, commission, or other public body is authorized to contract for the performance of highway work, it may, by virtue of its incidental powers and without express statutory authority, require of the contractor the execution of a bond with surety, conditioned for the proper performance of the work and other matters properly related thereto[55] Usually, however, statutes require a bond of a highway contractor, this obligation frequently being imposed by statutes applicable to public works or improvements generally.[56] Sometimes the bond is dual in character[57] in that it contains two obligations, one to the state, board, or district for the performance of the contract, see infra subdivision b of this section, and the other to laborers and materialmen to pay them for labor and material supplied, see infra subdivision c of this section, each obligation being independent of the other[58]

What law governs The law of the state where the bond is executed has been held to govern[59]

Consideration and acceptance The award of a contract for road work is a sufficient consideration for the promise of the contractor and his surety[60]

The surety's contract is complete and binding without any notice of acceptance, either by the original contractor or by persons entitled to the benefit of the bond[61]

Amount of bond The bond of a road contractor should be in the amount prescribed by the statute[62]

Sufficiency; approval The bond required of a contractor must run to the proper obligee,[63] but, where it is clear that the proper obligee was intended, a mere mistake will not invalidate the bond.[64] The statutory bond required of the contractor must embody the requirements specified in the statute,[65] although mere informalities in the bond or in its execution will not necessarily avoid it.[66] A bond may be sufficient although it is not in the exact words of the statute.[67] The validity of a bond may not be questioned after the district and the contractor have substantially performed.[68]

When required by statute the bond must be approved by the public officer designated.[69] In the absence of statutory directions, the sufficiency of the surety is a matter solely for the determination of the public officials in the exercise of their discretion.[70] The officers charged with the duty of approving or disapproving a bond are performing a duty that is discretionary, and the courts will not compel them to make any particular decision as far as the question of the sufficiency of the surety is concerned and their determination will not be disturbed in the absence of a showing that their action was arbitrary, oppressive or fraudulent.[71] Where a bond has been given and approved, but proves to be invalid, a second bond may be given without further approval.[72]

Construction General rules pertaining to the construction of bonds usually are applicable to contractors' bonds for highway work.[73] The bond must be construed as a whole[74] and in connection with the highway contract.[75] The terms of the bond should be construed liberally to effect the purpose for which it was given,[76] but its provisions should not be extended beyond the reasonable in-

Conflict of statutes

General Code § 2365-2 providing that bond shall be "in an amount equal to at least fifty per cent (50%) of the contract price" is not in irreconcilable conflict with Gen Code § 6917 requiring a "sum equal to one-half of the estimated cost of the work," but they can be and are to be read and construed together so as to give effect to both.—Southern Surety Co v Standard Slag Co, 159 N E 559, 117 Ohio St 512

tent gathered from the purpose and language of the bond, and construed in connection with the proposals, plans and specifications and contract.[77]

Statute as part of bond The statute requiring and regulating bonds of highway contractors is deemed to be a part of every statutory bond given by a contractor for road work[78] Such bonds are to be construed in connection with, and in the light of, the statute requiring them,[79] as though the provisions of the statute were written into them[80] However, there is authority that the statute fixing the terms of a bond will not be read into the bond[81]

Extrastatutory conditions. Premiums on bonds Where the highway construction contract and bond were never legally binding or effective, and no work was done under the contract, the highway authorities who had advanced the premiums on the surety bond may recover of the surety company the amount of premiums paid.[87] Where the surety company has been released from liability under the bond, the highway contractor is entitled to a recovery of the unearned premium.[88] Where the bond is canceled, the surety company may not recover premiums for a period postdating the cancellation.[89]

Liability of surety. General rules pertaining to the liability of sureties ordinarily apply to sureties on highway contractor's bonds.[90] The sureties are liable for a breach of the conditions of the bond[91] and the extent of their liability is measured by the terms of the bond[92] read in connection with the statute requiring the bond,[93] and liability cannot be extended beyond its terms;[94] the sureties' obligation is usually coextensive with, and does not exceed, the liability of the contractor.[95]

Discharge of surety General rules governing the discharge of sureties usually apply to sureties on bonds of highway contractors.[96] The court may not release the sureties on the bond unless the power is conferred by statute and action is taken in accordance with its terms,[97] and in the absence of statutory authority a county board as obligee of the bond is without power to release the surety on the giving of a new bond.[98] Further, where a board of county commissioners refuses to relieve a highway contractor and his surety from liability, it is without authority in the absence of statute to reverse its order.[99]

Rights of surety General rules regulating the rights of sureties usually are applicable to sureties on highway contractors' bonds.[1] The rights of the surety relate back to the date of the bond.[2]

(2) Rights, liabilities, and discharge of surety; defenses

(3) Completion of work by surety

(1) In General

On the letting of a contract for road work the highway contractor may be required to execute a bond conditioned for the faithful performance of the contract, which bond is primarily intended to indemnify the highway authorities for expense incurred in completing the work on default of the contractor

Highway contractors ordinarily are required by statute to give a bond for the faithful performance of the contract,[3] and, as shown infra subdivision c of this section, the statute may, in addition, require an obligation in the bond for the payment of claims due laborers, materialmen, etc

Construction Where a highway contractor's bond is given for the performance of the contract, the bond is made with relation to the contract and as a part of it and the two are to be construed together.[4] An undertaking given by a compensated surety to guarantee the faithful performance of a contract for the improvement of a public highway stands on the same footing as a contract affecting the public interest, and should, it has been said, be construed liberally in favor of the public [5]

Persons secured. A bond for the faithful performance of the contract is primarily for the benefit of the highway authorities and is intended to indemnify them for expense necessarily incurred by them in completing the work contracted for in the event the contractor quits the work before it is completed.[6] Whether a faithful performance bond inures to the benefit of third persons, such as laborers, materialmen, and the like, depends on the intention of the parties as expressed in the bond, construed in connection with the contract and the statute pursuant to which the bond has been given [7] A performance bond is not for the benefit of laborers and materialmen where a separate bond for their benefit is executed by the contractor,[8] and in such cases they may not claim the benefit of the performance bond merely because they have lost their rights under the bond given for their benefit by failing to perfect their claim in the manner prescribed[9] or by failing to bring suit on their bond within the time prescribed [10] However, a performance bond may inure to the benefit of laborers and materialmen where there is a provision in the contract binding the contractor to pay for labor and material,[11] and, as shown infra subdivision c (1) of this section, where the statute directs that the contractor's bond shall contain a condition for the benefit of laborers and materialmen, such persons may be protected under the statute although the condition is omitted from the bond Nevertheless where the contract simply obligates the contractor to furnish the material and to perform the work, it has been held that the bond for performance does not embrace payment of claims for labor and material [12]

(2) Rights, Liabilities, and Discharge of Surety, Defenses

The rights, liabilities, and discharge of sureties on highway contractors' performance bonds are usually controlled by general rules

General rules regulating the liability of sureties usually apply to sureties on highway contractors' bonds conditioned for the faithful performance of the contract [13] On default of the contractor the surety becomes liable for the performance of the contract,[14] and consent to the completion of the

Defaulted contractors' surety cannot complain of increased cost of work due to damage by elements during negotiations with contractor proposed by surety and original faul-

work by the contractor's surety is a waiver of damages occasioned by the default of the principal [15] When the construction contract has been fully performed, there can be no liability on a faithful performance bond [16] In an action by the highway authorities for failure of the contractor to complete the work it is no defense that the surety is also liable on a bond to labor and material claimants who are not parties to the action [17]

Discharge of sureties General rules controlling the discharge of sureties ordinarily apply to sureties on highway contractors' bonds conditioned for the faithful performance of the contract [18] The surety may be released where the highway authorities breach the contract [19] The surety is released where the highway authorities make material changes in the contract which were not authorized to be made under the terms of the contract [20] or where the authorities fail to withhold the percentage required to be withheld under the terms of the contract [21] or bond [22] Where the contractor abandons the contract and the surety tenders an acceptable contractor who is willing to complete the contract in accordance with the original plans and specifications, and requests and urges the authorities to make such a contract and agrees as surety to be bound thereby, and to indemnify against any loss for failure of the new contractor to complete the contract, and the highway authorities refuse to make such contract, but instead make with the same contractor a more onerous contract, the surety is released from all liability over and above that which it would have incurred had the authorities made the contract tendered [23]

Rights of surety completing contract see infra subdivision b (3) of this section

(3) Completion of Work by Surety

A surety on a highway contractor's bond who completes the work on default of the contractor has certain rights and liabilities, including the right to funds remaining in the hands of the highway authorities

The surety on a highway contractor's bond who takes over the work on default of the contractor puts himself in the place of the contractor[25] and assumes, it has been held, the obligation to complete the work according to specifications and to pay claims for labor and material.[26] However, the surety does not become obligated to pay the personal debts incurred by the contractor during the progress of the work, except such as are properly chargeable against the contract under the law.[27] The surety on the bond of the original contractor who has defaulted remains liable to laborers, materialmen, and subcontractors where he contracts with the highway authorities to complete the work and the original bond conditioned for the payment of labor and material claims is made a part of its contract for completion.[28] The surety, by reason of his status as surety, may succeed to certain rights under principles of subrogation.[29]

Letting of contract by surety, bond The surety taking over the work may engage a contractor to complete the work.[30] For his protection the surety may require a bond of the new contractor,[31] and such a bond usually is a private, as distinguished from a statutory, undertaking.[32] The bond inures to the benefit of persons performing labor and furnishing material where it contains a condition for their protection similar to the condition found in statutory bonds running to the highway authorities.[33]

Right of surety to payments Under the rules stated in the C.J.S. title Subrogation § 59, also 60

Right to use of equipment

(1) Acts W.Va.1921, c. 112, § 25 provides that the state road commission, before construction of a road, shall file with the clerk of the county court of the county a copy of the specifications and notice of its intended construction. Where specifications so filed provided that on default by the contractor the commission might take over and complete the work and might use materials and equipment on the ground, it was held that where the commission took over the work on default of the contractor and turned it over to his surety for completion, the surety was entitled to the use of any materials and equipment on the ground and in use by the contractor, as against a chattel mortgage thereof, whose mortgage was taken after filing of the specifications.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Davis Trust Co., D.C.W.Va., 294 F. 573.

(2) Where a contract for the construction of a state highway provided that, if the contractor failed in any respect to prosecute the work with promptness etc., the state might take possession of all the road-building equipment and supplies, and complete the construction of the highway, the state was in no sense obliged to take over such equipment and supplies, for the benefit of the contractor's surety on the default of the contractor, but the state could abandon its right and look solely to the contractor's surety to complete the contract, and therefore the surety was not subrogated to any right of the state as obligee of the bond to appropriate and use the equipment as against the trustee in bankruptcy of the contractor.—U. C.J p 777 note 60 et seq, a surety on a highway contractor's bond who completes the work on default of the contractor has an interest in unpaid sums due under the contract to the extent necessary to reimburse it for its loss [34] The right of the surety to deferred payments has been held superior to that of an assignee of the funds,[35] including an assignee, such as a bank, which has lent money to the contractor [36] The surety is not entitled to share in the fund where it is less than the amount due laborers and materialmen and the surety is liable under the bond for the excess which will remain due them [37]

(1) In General

The highway authorities, on letting a contract for highway work, may require of the contractor a bond conditioned for the payment of claims for labor, material, etc

In the absence of statutory restrictions, it has been held that on letting a contract for road work the highway authorities may require a bond for the protection of laborers, materialmen, and the like, although such a bond or condition is not required by statute [38] Under various statutes, many of which apply to public works or improvements generally, persons contracting to do highway work are required to give bond for the payment of claims for labor, material, and the like, the obligation required for the payment of claims for labor and material sometimes being an undertaking additional to the obligation to perform the contract [39] The federal statute, 40 U S C A. § 270, requiring any contractor on a public work of the United States to give bond with the additional obligation for the payment of persons supplying labor and material, discussed in the C J S title United States §§ 107–116, also 65 C J. p 1323 note 63 et seq, applies in the case of highway contractors under contract with the United States [40]

Validity of statutes

Statute requiring bond of contractors engaged in public work is not

The statutes requiring a bond or condition for the protection of laborers and materialmen are remedial in their nature,[41] the purpose being to insure payment to persons who supply labor or material, and to render it impossible for any contractor performing such work, whether insolvent or dishonest, to fail to pay for the labor and material supplied and for which the contractor has himself been paid,[42] and also to give protection to the public through the security afforded by the bond which has a substantial tendency to lower the prices at which labor and material will be furnished, because of the assurance that claims will be paid [43] The bond is intended to provide an equivalent of, or substitute for, a mechanics' or materialmen's lien which laborers, materialmen, etc., ordinarily do not possess in the case of public property such as highways.[44]

Where the statute directs that the bond shall contain a condition for the payment of claims for labor and material, or requires a broader condition than is inserted in the bond, such persons are protected under the statute although the condition is omitted from the bond, or the condition is narrower than the one which is required by the statute,[45] although it has also been held that the words of the statute will not be read into the bond,[46] and that a bond payable to the highway authorities which omits the statutory condition for the payment of labor and material is invalid and of no effect [47] Laborers, materialmen, etc, are entitled to the benefit of a condition inserted in the bond for their protection although it is in excess of the conditions required unconstitutional because making surety liable for materials furnished but not bodily entered into permanent structure —Franzen v Southern Surety Co 246 P 30, 35 Wyo 15, 46 A L R 496

Repeal of statute

Act requiring highway contractor's bond to state to pay for material and labor was not repealed by statute requiring bond for prompt completion of work —State ex rel Concrete & Steel Const Co v Southern Surety Co, 294 S W 123, 221 Mo App 67

Highway as "structure" within statute requiring bond

County district highway, permanently constructed and improved by use of cement and stone by county court, under authority of Code c 43 § 104, is a "structure," within chapter 75 § 12, providing that court shall require bond for completion of contract containing condition requiring payment by contractor for materials, labor, machinery and equipment, used in construction of public building or other "structure" to be used for public purposes —State v Royal Indemnity Co, 128 S E 439, 99 W Va 277, 43 A L R 552

by statute,[48] although under some authorities an extrastatutory condition for their protection is of no effect[49]

Sufficiency The bond is sufficient as a statutory bond where the language used, in its legal effect, imposes the obligation required by the statute for the benefit of those furnishing labor and material although the language is not identical with the wording of the statute[50] Where the statute requiring the bond is valid, the bond is not void for duress notwithstanding the parties executed it pursuant to a statute which has been declared unconstitutional[51]

Construction General rules pertaining to the construction of bonds usually apply in construing a highway contractor's bond or obligation to pay laborers, materialmen, and the like[52] In construing statutes requiring the execution of a bond conditioned for the payment of labor, material, and the like, it is proper to consider the object the legislature intended to accomplish by its enactment[53] A statutory bond must be construed in the light of the statute requiring it[54]

A bond conditioned for the payment of claims for labor and material, and the statute under which it usually is given, should be liberally construed,[55] although in some cases the undertaking of the surety with respect to labor and material claims has been strictly construed[56] At any rate, liberality of construction cannot justify an extension of meaning beyond the limits of the statute's clearly expressed terms[57]

Liability for failure to require bond In some jurisdictions statutes impose liability on the highway authorities for failure to require a bond or to take a sufficient bond conditioned for the payment of claims for labor, material, and the like,[58] under some statutes the authorities are expressly made liable to the same extent as the surety would have been had a bond been taken or had the surety been solvent [59] The highway authorities may not avoid liability under the statute by giving claimants notice that they will not be responsible for labor or material furnished to the contractor [60]

The liability of highway officers and agents for failure to require a bond of the contractor is discussed supra § 171

(2) Person Secured

Whether a particular person is secured by a highway contractor's bond conditioned for the payment of claims for labor, material, etc, depends on the terms of the bond and of the statute

Whether a particular person is entitled to the benefit and protection of a highway contractor's bond conditioned for the payment of claims for labor, material, and the like depends on whether he is within the terms of the bond and of the statute where the statute is regarded as part of the bond [61] In determining who is secured, the bond and the statute under which it may have been given ordinarily are construed liberally,[62] although in some cases the undertaking of the surety has been strictly construed [63]

(a) In General

What claims are covered by a highway contractor's bond conditioned for the payment of claims for labor, material, and the like depends on the terms of the bond and statute

The courts are not entirely in accord as to what claims are covered by a bond of a highway contractor conditioned for the payment of claims for labor, material, and the like.[77] Whether a particular claim is covered by the bond depends on the terms of the bond and of the statute where the statute is regarded as part of the bond.[78] It is to be noted that the terms of the statutes and the bonds given pursuant thereto vary in the different jurisdictions, and that cases from other states, or even cases within the same jurisdiction under a prior and different statute or bond, are not necessarily controlling.[79]

In determining whether a particular claim is covered by the bond, some courts adopt a liberal construction of the statute and bond,[80] while others construe the undertaking of the surety strictly.[81] Where the particular claims for which the surety is liable are specified by the statute, items not enumerated by the legislature should not be included by the courts under the guise of giving the statute a liberal construction.[82]

Materials, supplies, etc., generally The word "materials," as used in the statutes and bonds of highway contractors, has been held to signify things furnished to a workman or artisan to be used in his work.[83] "Materials" is a narrower term than the

(3) Person contracting with contractor to furnish crushed rock, needed in performance of county road construction contract, was not "subcontractor" but "materialman," regardless of whether rock was available as commodity in open market—Northwest Roads Co v Clyde Equipment Co, C C A Or, 79 F 2d 771

Superintendent or subcontractor

Person in charge of concrete work on highway construction job was a "subcontractor" and not a 'superintendent", and hence such person's claim for labor was covered by contractor's bond guaranteeing full payment of claims of persons supplying labor and materials in prosecution of work, notwithstanding such person was paid thirty-five dollars per week during period consumed in completing contract, and that balance of his compensation was to be a percentage of contractor's net profits—Trinity Universal Ins Co v Coker 150 S W 2d 640, 286 Ky 261

Subcontractor as contractor's agent

After execution, and county commissioner's approval, of contract between corporation, previously awarded contract by county for construction of highway, and person for whom corporation acted in bidding therefor, that he should do all work and furnish materials necessary to perform construction contract, take it over, and assume all obligations thereunder, he was not contractor's "agent" within provision thereof that subcontractor should be considered contractor's agent, so that his employee could not recover, as third party beneficiary under such provision, from contractor and surety on its bond for hauling and spreading gravel—Hazard v C E O'Neill Co, 108 P 2d 660, 6 Wash 2d 667

'Material" defined generally see the C J S definition Material, also 39 C J p 1385 note 14 et seq

word "supplies"[84] and both terms are to be distinguished from the machinery, tools, and appliances constituting the general or permanent plant of the contractor[85]

The bond does not cover all articles or materials furnished to the highway contractor or subcontractor[86] The materials must be necessary to the proper performance of the contract[87] or at least reasonably regarded as within the contemplation of the parties,[88] and must be furnished for use in the execution of the contract[89] which the bond purports to cover[90] A claim for material furnished to the contractor prior to the execution of the contract for the construction or improvement of the highway usually is not within the bond,[91] although a bond may cover claims for materials furnished prior to its execution[92]

While there is authority holding that a claim for material does not come within the bond unless the material is used in the construction of the road in a physical sense,[93] as a general rule materials, supplies, etc, need not be actually incorporated into the

Determination of nature of article

(1) The test of whether a given thing constitutes a "supply" or "equipment" within statutes relating to public contractors' bonds is whether the article forms a part of the finished structure, and in addition if, although such things do not become a physical part of the finished product, structure, or improvement they are entirely consumed in the course of the construction they are "supplies" and not "equipment"—U S Fidelity & Guaranty Co v Fecnaughty Machinery Co, 85 P 2d 1085, 197 Wash 569

(2) "There are certain definite principles which aid in determining whether given articles are to be classified as materials or tools, implements or equipment The decisions in this state seem to proceed upon the theory that material consists of such articles as (1) are necessary and indispensable to the performance of the contract, (2) which the parties must reasonably contemplate will be incorporated into the work or be consumed in the performance of the contract, and (3) which lose their identity in the finished product, so as to be indistinguishable from the mass"—Jenkins Hardware Co v Globe Indemnity Co, 170 S E 643, 644, 205 N C 185

(3) Whether particular articles constitute 'materials and supplies" within the bond or "equipment" must be determined according to their inherent nature and the purpose for which they were procured and not by the circumstance alone that they do or do not outlast the job

use or consume the material wholly or exclusively, in the performance of the contract.[1]

Labor claims generally In some cases the word "labor," as used in the statute and bonds of highway contractors, has been held to mean physical or common labor,[2] although services performed by a laborer may constitute "labor" notwithstanding he combines his labor with his own equipment.[3] In other cases the courts have declined to confine the term to physical or manual labor,[4] and include labor performed with the aid of horses, tractors, and other mechanical equipment.[5]

The labor performed must be necessary to the performance of the contract[6] and must be performed in furtherance thereof.[7] The bond should not be interpreted so as to cover labor claims arising after the work is abandoned, although under special facts and circumstances liability on the bond may arise.[8]

It is not necessary generally that the labor go directly into the work,[9] but it is sufficient if labor necessary to the completion of the work materially contributes to its progress and completion.[10] A claim for labor performed may come within the bond although it was performed at some distance from the site of the work.[11]

Mechanics' lien statutes as affecting claims. In determining whether a claim is covered by a bond for the payment of claims for labor, material, and the like, the bond may be held to embrace at least such claims as are lienable in the case of private construction,[12] and it has been said that the bond should afford no greater security than the mechanics' lien statute gives in the case of a private construction.[13] However, it has also been held that claims under the bond are not limited to such claims as are lienable under the statute.[14]

(b) Equipment, Tools, and Appliances

A claim for the price of machinery and appliances constituting the general equipment of the contractor ordinarily is not within a labor and material bond of a highway contractor, although some courts have allowed claims for rental of equipment and for incidental repairs to the equipment

A highway contractor's bond conditioned for the payment of labor, material, and the like, ordinarily does not include a claim for the price of tools, implements, and machinery constituting the general or permanent equipment of the contractor or subcontractor,[15] which are not consumed or worn out in

However, it has also been held that tools which are not consumed or destroyed in the work are not covered by the bond.[26]

Where the parties in their contract define the word "materials," as including equipment, and such definition is carried into the bond by an express incorporation by reference, it has been held that the bond covers a claim for the price of equipment.[27]

Rental of equipment The courts are not agreed on the question whether a bond of a highway contractor, conditioned for the payment of labor, material, and the like, covers the rental value of machinery or equipment used in the work,[32] the disagreement being in part a result of the varying terms of the statutes, pursuant to which the bonds have been executed[33] In some cases it has been held that a claim for the rental value of equipment or machinery used in performance of the contract is covered by the bond,[34] whether the equipment is leased to the contractor[35] or subcontractor[36]

are sold and charged to the subcontractor,[58] at least where the location of the work makes it necessary to board the men or to furnish them with food[59] and the boarding house or commissary of the contractor is not operated for a profit.[60] However, it has also been held that a claim for groceries and provisions for the workmen does not come within the bond,[61] notwithstanding the contractor deducts the board of each employee from his wages.[62] A claim for groceries and provisions may be rejected where it appears that there were no circumstances of necessity which required the contractor to furnish board or provisions[63] or it appears that the boarding house or commissary of the contractor was operated for a profit,[64] although it has been held that necessity or indispensability is not an absolute test, and if the provisions supplied can be reasonably regarded as within the contemplation of the parties and contribute to the work and are consumed in its prosecution the surety is liable.[65]

In some jurisdictions statutes have been enacted which require that the bond be conditioned for payment of claims for food and groceries furnished laborers on the job.[66]

Arrangement by contractor with different dealer

Highway contractor's liability on bond for stock feed furnished to subcontractor was not affected by fact that contractor made arrangements

is authority that a claim for feed for animals is not within the bond.[76] In some jurisdictions statutes expressly require that the bond shall be conditioned for the payment of claims for furnishing feed for animals.[77]

A claim for harness and other equipment for horses and mules has been held to come within the bond,[78] although some courts have refused to allow a claim for harness,[79] and where the harness is purchased with the intention of using it on other jobs and it is actually so used the claim is not within the bond.[80] A claim for shoeing horses has been held to be outside the bond.[81]

A claim for veterinary services has been allowed against the bond,[82] and, although the work has ceased, a claim for wages of men in caring for horses and other property may, under particular circumstances, be allowed.[83]

Fuel, coal, oil, gasoline, etc The courts are not in accord on the question whether a bond of a highway contractor conditioned for the payment of claims for labor and material and the like includes oil, gasoline, kerosene, lubricants, etc., used in operating trucks and machinery employed in the construction or repair of the road.[84] Some courts have held that such items are covered by the bond,[85]

"The contract by which defendants undertook the work of building the highway contemplated that the gravel should be transported from the railway cars to the highway. It required power to do this, and the gasoline in question furnished the power. It is true that the gasoline was not visible after the highway was finished, but it was as visible as the labor which was bestowed upon it. It was used directly upon and for the highway, and was instrumental in producing the final result. In most jurisdictions powder and dynamite used for blasting have been regarded as 'materials furnished.' The use of gasoline to convey materials with which to build this highway contributed to and enhanced its value in the same way that powder and dynamite do in blasting for highways. Neither is physically incorporated into the highway, but both are wholly consumed in aid of the work. The gasoline contributed to and enhanced the value of the highway as much as though the gravel had been moved by man power or horse power. The statute contemplates that labor and materials used in constructing, repairing or ornamenting a building improvement or works shall be protected by the bond. As the gasoline in question materially aided in the construction and building of the highway, and enhanced its value it should be regarded as 'materials furnished' within the meaning of the statute."—Smith v Oosting 203 N W 131, 132, 230 Mich 1

whether they are supplied to the contractor[86] or to the subcontractor.[87] However, it has also been held that the bond does not cover oil, gasoline, kerosene, etc, although they are used to operate trucks or machinery engaged in the construction or repair of the highway,[88] whether such products are furnished to the contractor[89] or to the subcontractor[90] At any rate, a claim for the price of oil, gasoline, etc, has been disallowed where it did not appear that such products were furnished for use in the performance of the highway contract[91] or where it appeared that such products furnished to a subcontractor were diverted to other uses[92]

Coal used in the prosecution of the work has been held to come within the terms of the bond,[93] although some courts have declined to adopt this view[94]

"Clearly, the purpose of the oil is to lubricate the mechanism of the truck so that it will preserve the parts and render locomotion possible The gasoline is used because it is the power which operates the truck and makes it possible to transport the material to be incorporated in the public improvement When the parts are lubricated and the gasoline tank filled, the purposes of both are achieved and then and there end Thus there is no direct relationship between the component parts of the improvement and the oil and gasoline in the truck There is no nexus between these elements contained in the truck and the ingredients composing the improvement Hence they do not enter into the construction thereof, and it cannot be said that the Legislature in the language used in the statute ever intended that the power necessary to move the truck and transport the materials was material that entered into the construction of the improvement"—Standard Oil Co v Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co 157 N E 418, 419, 24 Ohio App 237

purpose of paying claims for labor and material and is actually used for such purpose, and in some jurisdictions statutes have been enacted which expressly exclude persons who have lent or advanced money to the contractor, subcontractor, or other person[6] However, it has also been held that a labor and material bond covers a loan to the contractor made for the purpose of paying labor and material claims[7]

In some jurisdictions a person advancing money directly to the workmen or materialmen and taking an assignment of their claims is entitled, as assignee, to recover against the surety on the bond the amount advanced[8] In the absence of an assignment of the claims it has been held that one who cashes in merchandise pay checks of the contractor's employees has no recourse on the bond,[9] although there is authority that where money is advanced directly to the workmen they are parties to the transaction which results in an equitable assignment of their claims[10]

Tort liability; damages for breach of contract. A bond of a highway contractor conditioned for the payment of claims for labor and material and the like usually does not cover claims for damages for personal injuries suffered by an employee of the contractor while working on the job,[17] or claims for personal injuries suffered by third persons from the tortious or negligent acts of the contractor or his employees,[18] or because of the tortious acts of the subcontractor[19]

It has been held that such a bond does not cover a claim for damages, including loss of profits, suffered by a subcontractor who has been prevented by the contractor from completing the work under the subcontract[20] or because of the contractor's refusal to take all the materials contracted for[21]

Transportation, charges for freight and demurrage A bond of a highway contractor conditioned for the payment of claims for labor and material and the like has been deemed to include claims for transportation of the contractor's employees from one place to another during the day's work,[22] and claims for transportation of the contractor's equipment to or from the job[23] and for the hauling of materials[24] The transportation of materials for a contractor in order that he may have them on hand for incorporation into the work has been held to constitute "labor" within the bond[25] However, it has been held that a claim for hauling and transporting materials in, on, and about the job is not covered by the bond[26]

In the case of a common carrier, a claim for freight for carrying material consigned to the contractor for use in the performance of the contract, and demurrage charges, has been allowed in some jurisdictions under a labor and material bond, in such jurisdictions the fact that the carrier had a lien on the goods does not deprive it of a remedy on the bond[30] Claims for water transportation, carried on over short distances at frequent or irregular intervals, where the practice may not be to pay for such transportation on delivery of the materials, or to assert the carrier's lien, are within the bond[31]

(4) Rights, Liabilities, and Discharge of Surety, Defenses

General rules governing the rights, liabilities, and discharge of sureties ordinarily apply to sureties on highway contractors' bonds conditioned for the payment of claims for labor, material, and the like

General rules governing the liability of sureties usually are applicable to sureties on highway contractors' bonds conditioned for the payment of claims for labor, material, and the like[32] The liability of the sureties is to be measured by the terms of the bond[33] read in conjunction with the statute requiring the bond,[34] and not by the terms of the contract between the contractor and highway authorities[35] The surety is liable notwithstanding the contractor assigns[36] or sublets[37] the contract A notice by the general contractor disclaiming liability for debts incurred by his subcontractor will not relieve the surety of liability for labor or material

Application of payments

(1) According to some authorities payments received by labor or material claimants or their assignee must be applied in satisfaction of the claim and may not be applied on the contractor's general indebtedness—Fulghum v State, 114 So 367, 94 Fla 274

(2) Where contractor owed cement company under several contracts, including a highway construction contract secured by a bond, surety on the bond had the legal right to have payments by contractor from funds derived from the highway contract applied to the indebtedness thereunder and was not liable to the cement company which, knowing the source of the funds applied them in payment of indebtedness under other contracts, although cement company was directed to make such application by the contractor—Ash Grove Lime & Portland Cement Co v Moran Const Co, 296 N W 761, 139 Neb 176

(3) Contractor's payment of sight draft for invoice price of goods shipped estopped materialman from contending in suit against surety that payment was not for goods shipped—Jackson v Federal Surety Co, 228 N W 400, 56 S D 335

Assignee of claimant

Mere fact that assignee of claim for labor and material furnished in construction of highway accepts note of contractor does not affect such claimant's rights against surety on contractor's bond—Southern Surety Co v People's State Bank of South Carolina, C C A S C, 47 F 2d 93

enforcement of his claim against the contractor[47] Where the subcontractor perfects a lien against funds in the hands of the highway authorities, it has been held that the voluntary release of the lien by the subcontractor without notice to, or knowledge of, the surety on the principal contractor's bond discharges the surety from liability to the subcontractor for the amount covered by the lien,[48] although it has also been held that the surety is liable notwithstanding a claimant fails to file his claim with the highway authorities[49] or acquiesces in the contractor's request not to file his claim[50]

A county as payee of the bond cannot release the sureties of their liability to laborers and materialmen[51]

Rights of surety General rules pertaining to the rights of sureties ordinarily apply to sureties on highway contractors' bonds conditioned for the payment of claims for labor, material, and the like[52] The surety is entitled to have money due on the highway contract applied to the payment of labor and material claims for which it is liable under the bond[53] and before any portion of it is paid to an assignee of the fund[54]

d. Other Conditions or Bonds of Contractor

Various other conditions have appeared in highway contractors' bonds, and the contractor may be required to execute an indemnity bond or a maintenance bond

Various other conditions may appear in highway contractors' bonds,[55] such as a condition to indemnify all holders of just claims against the principal arising out of the performance of the contract,[56]

Contract providing for payment in notes

Where the contract between the contractor and materialman provided for payment, one half in cash and balance in notes materialman's acceptance of notes for more than half did not discharge surety from liability on notes properly taken, but materialman could not recover for notes improperly taken—Piel Const Co v Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to Use of Hendricks, C C A Pa, 35 F 2d 265

e. Subcontractors' Bonds

(1) In general

(2) For payment for labor and material, etc

(1) In General

On subletting a highway contract, the principal contractor may require a bond of the subcontractor

A highway contractor who sublets the contract or a portion thereof may require the subcontractor to furnish a bond for his protection [64] When the bond is not required by statute, it is to be construed as a common-law obligation rather than a statutory bond [65] Such a bond is primarily for the protection of the principal contractor,[66] and, when he or his surety pays claims for which the subcontractor is liable, recovery may be had on the subcontractor's bond [67] The bond does not inure to the benefit of other persons, unless it also contains a condition or clause which can be construed as having been inserted for their benefit [68]

General rules relating to the discharge of sureties usually apply to the surety on a subcontractor's bond, who asserts that he has been released from liability to the principal contractor [69]

Claim for insurance premiums
(1) A surety on faithful performance bond of subcontractor doing highway construction work was not liable to an insurance agency for premiums on public and employers' liability policies by reason of provision in subcontract which required subcontractor to "carry" such policies for protection of public and subcontractor's employees since protection intended was fully complied with when subcontractor "carried" insurance during progress and until completion of the work and insurance agencies issuing the policies were merely "incidental beneficiaries" —Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co v Hewes 199 So 93, 190 Miss 225 modified on other grounds on suggestion of error 199 So 772, 190 Miss 225

(2) However, where surety bond guaranteed performance of highway subcontract and all duly authorized modifications thereof and original subcontract only required subcontractor to carry liability insurance, oral promise of subcontractor to principal contractor not only to carry but to "pay" for liability insurance was a "modification" contemplated by the bond and imposed liability on surety to pay the insurance agency for premiums on the liability policies —Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co v Hewes, 11 So 2d 309, 193 Miss 850

(3) Premiums for public liability, collision, and property damage insurance procured by subcontractor are not included in the term "insurance" as used in statute requiring bond of public contractor for the use "of all persons doing work or furnishing insurance premiums" and recovery for the premiums may not be had by an insurance agency —Kunz Ins Agency v Phillips, 255 N W 90, 191 Minn 626

69. Loan by contractor to subcontractor
Sureties on subcontractors' bond were not released by subsequent agreement of contractor to finance subcontractors, such being no material alteration of contract —Highway Iron Products Co v Phillips, 169 N E 878, 91 Ind App 283

Payment to subcontractor before receiving estimate
Fact that contractor made payments for labor and materials to subcontractor under grading contract before receiving estimate of highway engineer did not release surety on subcontractor's bond where no overpayments resulted — Chernus v Kennedy-Coats Const Co, 55 S W 2d 744, 227 Mo App 582, certiorari quashed State ex rel Union Indemnity Co v Shain, 66 S W 2d 102, 331 Mo 153

Rescission of subcontract
Diminishing of work to be performed under highway construction subcontract by supplemental contract between contractor and state was not rescission of subcontract, so as to relieve from liability surety on subcontractor's bond, which authorized alterations in terms of contract, or in work done thereunder where subcontract provided that performance should be subject to specifications of highway department and contract with highway department provided that specifications were subject to

(2) For Payment for Labor and Material, Etc.

A subcontractor may be required by the principal contractor to give a bond conditioned for the payment of claims of laborers and materialmen

In the absence of a statutory requirement the principal contractor is under no obligation to take a bond for the protection of laborers and materialmen,[70] although bonds of highway subcontractors running to the principal contractor sometimes contain a condition for the payment of claims for labor, material, and the like[71] Such bonds have been liberally construed[72]

Persons secured Whether a particular person is entitled to the protection of a labor and material bond of a subcontractor depends on the terms of the bond[73] Such bonds have been held to inure to the benefit of persons performing labor for,[74] or supplying materials to,[75] the subcontractor However, it has also been held that a subcontractor's bond payable to the contractor does not inure to the benefit of labor and material claimants, although it is conditioned that the subcontractor shall pay all claims for, labor and material furnished[76]

Claims secured The question what claims are covered by a bond of a highway subcontractor conditioned for the payment of labor and material and the like depends on the terms of the bond[77] Such bonds have been held to cover various claims,[78] such as a claim for services of a foreman of the subcontractor,[79] for groceries and provisions consumed by the subcontractor's employees,[80] and for gasoline, oil, grease, etc,[81] and to exclude various other claims,[82] such as a claim for the purchase price of equipment tools and machinery constituting the plant of the subcontractor[83] or owned by drivers employed by the subcontractor[84] A claim for repairs to equipment has been held to be within the bond[85] at least where such repairs are minor and incidental,[86] but such a claim has also been denied,[87] particularly where the repairs are of a permanent nature[88] A claim for the rental value of machinery used by the subcontractor has been allowed[89] and rejected[90]

Money lent to the subcontractor, although for the purpose of paying labor and material claims ordinarily is not covered by the bond,[91] although it has been held that, where money is advanced directly to the workmen, the lender becomes an equitable assignee of their labor claims[92]

Liability and discharge of surety General rules governing the liability[93] and discharge[94] of sureties ordinarily apply to sureties on the bond of highway subcontractors conditioned for the payment of labor and material and the like

f. Bonds to Obtain Release of Funds

By executing a sufficient bond a highway contractor may secure the release of funds retained by the highway authorities

In some jurisdictions a contractor is permitted by statute to execute a bond, variously termed a release, replevin, or refunding or withdrawal bond, in order to obtain highway funds due him and retained or impounded by the highway authorities[95]

Bond given by subcontractor

Tex—Employers Liability Assur Corporation v Young County Lumber Co, supra.

This bond serves to release the statutory lien on the funds in the hands of the highway authorities,[96] and is to be distinguished from the bond given by the contractor, as considered supra subdivisions a–d of this section, at the time of the letting of the contract.[97] Unless required by the statute, a surety is not required on the bond.[98] Such bonds are to be liberally construed.[99]

These bonds have been held to inure to the benefit of persons performing labor for, or furnishing materials to, the contractor,[1] subcontractors,[2] and persons performing labor or supplying materials to a subcontractor.[3]

Where the bond is conditioned to pay such claims as are liens on the fund in the hands of the highway authorities, the bond does not within itself create a liquidated liability, but only becomes security for the payment of such claims as are proved to be liens against the funds.[4]

(5) Parties; persons entitled to sue
(6) Time to sue, laches, and limitations
(7) Pleadings
(8) Evidence
(9) Trial
(10) Judgment, damages, and amount of recovery

(1) In General

Subject to the limitation that an exclusive statutory procedure must be followed, an action may be maintained to recover for the breach of a highway contractor's bond

The breach of a highway contractor's bond constitutes in general a cause of action [5] The fact that claimant could have enforced payment of his claim by virtue of a lien on the materials delivered, which lien was surrendered, does not prevent recovery for the claim on the contractor's bond [6]

It has been held that where a statute provides a definite procedure to be followed in bringing action on a bond executed by a road contractor, the statutory requirements must be observed in all essential respects in order to recover thereunder [7] A statutory remedy for enforcing liability on a construction bond which is not exclusive does not preclude a claimant from proceeding to enforce his claim by another available remedy,[8] but where a claimant elects to take the statutory remedy he is limited to its provisions [9] A provision that a statute, creating new remedies for existing rights of laborers and materialmen on contractor's bonds, should not affect pending suits does not apply to a suit brought after the act went into effect on a cause of action accruing before such time [10]

A suit on a highway contractor's bond may be a statutory action, equitable in nature [11] In some jurisdictions, when the covenant in the bond provides security for a class not a party to the bond, a member of the class may sue in equity on the bond,[12] but a beneficiary of a highway contractor's bond, not a party to the bond, cannot sue thereon in a court of law unless the bond was made for his sole benefit [13]

Under some statutes suit on the bond may be joined with a suit of a claimant to establish his claim [14] Some statutes contemplate that only one suit shall be brought on a contractor's bond in which all parties are entitled to be present and be heard [15]

(2) Jurisdiction and Venue

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, the jurisdiction of an action on a highway contractor's bond is determined by the general laws of the state The venue of such actions is primarily a matter of statutory regulation.

Where no attempt is made by statute to confer jurisdiction over the subject matter of suits on contractors' bonds on any particular court, the jurisdiction of a court depends on the general laws of the state [16] Where the statute contemplates but a single suit on a contractor's bond in which all parties are entitled to be present and be heard, it has been held that the surety's liability under the bond, as measured by the penalty named therein, determines the jurisdiction of the court, where the jurisdiction of a court of limited jurisdiction is involved, rather than the amount of any individual claim or the aggregate of all claims [17] Where the statute under which the bond was given provides a special remedy, an action on the bond is local and maintainable only in the state wherein the bond was given [18]

The venue of an action on a highway contractor's bond is primarily a matter of statutory regulation [19]

(3) Process

Statutory requirements relating to process in actions on highway contractors' bonds must be observed.

Where the statute requires that there be but one suit on a contractor's bond and that the necessary parties are to be brought in by publication of notice, failure to make such publication as required by statute is fatal [20] It has been held, where all other creditors may be cited by publishing a lis pendens notice of the suit, that the principal and surety on the bond will be required to take notice of the filing of such creditors' claims, and that service of citation on the principal by such creditors is unnecessary [21]

Notice of claim as a condition precedent to maintaining suit is considered infra subdivision g (4) of this section.

(4) Conditions Precedent; Filing of Claims

There must be a compliance with statutory conditions precedent to bringing suit on highway contractors' bonds

The right of a person other than the obligee to sue on a highway contractor's bond is usually entirely statutory, and does not come into existence in the absence of a substantial compliance with conditions stated in the statute [22] Where the contractors and their surety are primarily liable to all who furnished material required to complete the work, the holders of claims for furnishing such materials are not first required to exhaust their remedy against subcontractors who purchased such material before proceeding against the contractors and their surety [23] Where the condition of the bond is to save harmless the obligee from all cost and damage, the obligee has been held to be entitled to recover against the surety for the nonpayment of labor and material claims agreed to be paid, without

Bond given to obtain release of withheld funds

Under some statutes, where money is withheld from a highway contractor to secure the payment of claims filed with the state highway commission, the contractor may obtain the release of such funds on filing bond conditioned on the payment of such claims as may be proved to have been liens A provision in such statute that an obligee named in such bond may maintain a separate suit thereon in "any court and in any jurisdiction" does not change the venue or jurisdiction of a suit on the bond from that to establish a claim and lien, but leaves the matter exactly as it was before the statute providing for such bond was enacted Accordingly it was held that such a suit could not be maintained in a court of the county of plaintiff's residence which was not the domicile of either the principal or surety on the bond—Brown & Root v Durland, 84 S W 2d 1073, 126 Tex 20—Brown & Root v Durland, Tex Civ App, 56 S W 2d 516

first having paid such claims.[24] A surety on a highway contractor's bond, who does not execute notes evidencing a debt to a materialman, is liable to the materialman without a surrender or tender of the notes.[25]

Filing of notice generally A filing of a proper notice of claim is under some statutes a prerequisite to a recovery on a highway contractor's bond.[26] In a case between claimants who have furnished labor and material for a highway and the surety on a nonstatutory bond, given to secure the performance of the principal contract, the rights of such claimants are contractual, and, as between them and the surety, a statute requiring claims to be filed within a fixed time and in a prescribed form is not applicable.[27] Under a statute providing that each claimant shall file a sworn statement of claim within a specified time after the claimant ceases to perform labor or furnish labor, work done under a new and independent agreement, made with the contracts after the original agreement had ended, does not set the time running so as to preserve a claim for earlier work for which proper notice was not filed.[28] Where a filing of notice is required, but no time is specified it must be filed within a reasonable time.[29]

Where a claimant has optional remedies, a failure to file claim as required if he elects to follow one remedy does not deprive him of his right to pursue his alternative remedy where such filing is not required.[30]

prohibit the filing of claims before an acceptance of the work[31] On the other hand, under other statutes, the statement furnished the surety, to be effective, must be furnished after the acceptance of the improvement.[32] The acceptance of the work which will start the running of the limitation period must be some positive, affirmative action marking a definite and certain time[33] Use of the highway by the public for purposes of travel, without official approval thereof, before the completion of the highway does not amount to an acceptance of the highway[34]

Notice to principal or surety Under some statutes no action may be maintained on a statutory bond unless claimant serves on, or furnishes to, the principal and his sureties, or to the sureties, within a designated time, a written notice of claim[35] A statute requiring the filing of notice of claim is remedial and should be liberally construed,[36] and substantial compliance with the requirement is sufficient[37] The sufficiency of notice depends on whether the notice given conveys the information which the statute intends all interested persons shall have[38] Such notice is not judicial process designed to confer jurisdiction over the person of the sureties,[39] and any deficiency in the notice may

Posting and publishing notice

Action on highway contractor's bond, under statute which requires claimant to serve notice of claim on principal and sureties within sixty days after highway department causes to be "published" in newspaper "and" also "posts" notice of payment of final estimates, is maintainable where notice is served within sixty days after both publishing and posting are completed, although notice is served more than sixty days after one or the other is completed, since both posting and publication are required—Texas Co v Maloney, 44 P 2d 903, 48 Wyo 280

Particularity of detail

The statement required to be furnished surety need not be prepared with the particularity of detail required in a statement of account It is sufficient if the statement advises surety of the amount due and that it is for labor performed or material furnished in the construction of the improvement for which the bond is given—Southern Surety Co v Schmidt, 158 N E 1, 117 Ohio St 28

be waived by the surety retaining and acting on it without suggesting any defect therein [40] It is not necessary that service be had on an agent appointed in a particular manner or in a prescribed way, such as by the designation of an agent of a foreign corporation on whom judicial process may be served [41] Whether an agent is clothed with authority to receive such notice is a question of fact [42] In the absence of a provision in the statute to the contrary, the notices which are required to be given to the principal, surety, and obligee need not be identical [43] Under some statutes a materialman furnishing supplies to a subcontractor cannot recover on the bond of the principal contractor unless within a certain time after the date of the first delivery he notifies the principal contractor in writing that he is furnishing supplies to a subcontractor and that the contractor and his bond will be held for the payment for such supplies [44] Where the highway contract provides that the contractor shall not let or assign the contract or any part thereof without the consent of the state highway engineer, and that subcontractors should be considered agents of the contractor, a statute requiring persons furnishing supplies and materials to subcontractors to give notice to the contractor is inapplicable, and a failure to give such notice does not prevent a recovery on the contractor's bond [45]

Under some statutes a claimant is required to furnish the surety with a statement of the amount due within a certain time after the acceptance of the highway, and the furnishing of such statement within the prescribed time is a condition precedent to his right to bring action on the bond [46] The provisions of such a statute are for the benefit of sureties, and, when the notice given serves the purpose of the statute, the surety may not complain of technical irregularities [47]

Itemized and sworn statement There must be a compliance with a statutory requirement that claims be itemized and sworn to and filed with the county clerk within a designated time [48] The fact that the nature of the work made it difficult to determine the amount of work done does not postpone the commencement of the period for filing claims [49] A substantial compliance with statutory requirements as to the contents of the sworn statement is essential [50] A failure to state in the affidavit that the

of action and shall be authorized to bring suit in the name of the district for their use against the contractor and his surety are permissive, and do not prevent such persons from suing in their own names [55] On the other hand, it has been held that, except as provided otherwise by statute, a beneficiary under a bond, who is not named therein as an obligee, cannot sue thereon in his own name [56] General creditors of the contractor have been held to have no right to join in the proceedings brought to establish rights under the statute [57]

Assignee In the absence of a provision prohibiting assignments,[58] the claims of persons entitled to bring suit on a highway contractor's bond are assignable, and it is generally held that the assignment carries the security and the right of action thereon [59] On the other hand, in some jurisdictions it is held that the statutory right of a beneficiary to sue on the bond to which he is not a party is a mere nonassignable personal privilege, and that, in the absence of a statute empowering an assignee to maintain such a suit, he cannot sue on the contractor's bond [60] In Louisiana it has been held that an assignee of claims against a subcontractor, who paid nothing for the assignments, could not recover against the subcontractor's surety [61]

Proper and necessary parties The usual rules as to proper and necessary parties to a civil action apply to actions on a highway contractor's bond [62] Surety on a statutory undertaking given by a highway contractor to secure the release of funds on which a materialman files a lien has been held not to be a necessary party to an action to foreclose the lien [63] A claimant named in a highway contractor's refunding bond, expressly authorizing suit thereon, may sue notwithstanding the bond runs to the state,[64] and the state is not a necessary party to such a suit [65] Where the highway commissioner has no interest in the suit, he is neither a necessary nor a proper party [66]

laborers to have the interests of the parties determined, the appearance of materialmen and laborers in the action must be regarded as though made at the time the complaint was filed, although their cross complaints are not filed within the time limited by statute for bringing suit on such claims.[68] Where it is the apparent legislative intent to provide a lien on funds held by the highway board for a certain period, and that a failure to bring action within such time will constitute a loss of the remedy provided for reaching impounded funds, a failure to bring action within such time does not preclude suit on the contractor's bond.[69] A failure to sue on the bond within a reasonable time will not constitute laches so as to estop a claimant to sue thereon where surety was not prejudiced thereby.[70] A statute merely limiting the time within which notice of claim may be filed does not limit the time within which suit may be instituted on the bond after a proper notice has been filed.[71]

Under some statutes the time for bringing suit is limited to a certain time after complete performance of the contract and final settlement thereof.[72] The words "final settlement" under such statutes refer to the time when the amount due under the contract is determined by the appropriate administrative authority.[73]

Application for copy of bond

Statutory provision that materialmen shall make application for copy of road contractor's bond within sixty days after completion of contract does not extend time to sue if copy is not furnished.—Consolidated Indemnity & Insurance Co. v. Texas Co., 140 So. 566, 224 Ala. 349.

Statute is not retroactive and does not apply to bond given under earlier act.—Commonwealth v. National Surety Co., 93 Pa.Super. 285.

Tex.—Austin Bros. Bridge Co. v. Love, Com.App., 34 S.W.2d 574, reversing Love v. Austin Bros. Bridge Co., Civ.App., 5 S.W.2d 570.

Amount due is so "determined" when the final estimate of the highway department is approved by the governor.—Union Indemnity Co. v. Ricks, 140 So. 597, 224 Ala. 514.

Approval by examiner of public accounts and by the governor constitutes final settlement.—Consolidated Indemnity & Insurance Co. v. Southern G.-F. Co., 116 So. 383, 216 Ala. 214; U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Yeilding Bros. Co. Department Stores, 113 So. 176, 215 Ala. 307—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Andalusia Mfg. Co., 134 So. 18, 222 Ala. 637.

Certification, audit, and allowance

Final settlement" within such a statute is contingent on compliance with statute requiring construction expense to be certified, audited, and allowed.—Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, to Use of General Crushed Stone Co. v. Ætna Casualty & Surety Co., C.C.A.Pa., 63 F.2d 941.

Certified copy of auditor's warrant ostensibly for final estimate was evidence of final settlement, respecting question whether suit on road contractor's bond was premature.—Union Indemnity Co. v. Ricks, 140 So. 597, 224 Ala. 514.

Final estimate

A statute providing that all suits to enforce claims on bonds shall be commenced within six months from the date of final estimate to the contractor means the conclusion and determination of the person having final authority to make that finding.—Consolidated Indemnity & Insurance Co. v. Fischer Lime & Cement Co., 58 S.W.2d 928, 187 Ark. 131.

Not final payment

Final settlement is computation by proper governmental authority of

A provision in the bond limiting the period of suretyship does not establish a prescriptive period for bringing suit on the bond [74] Surety on a bond given by a subcontractor to the contractor, which is an indemnity against loss, has been held not to have a right to invoke as a defense a time limitation fixed in the bond where it was not reasonably possible, under the circumstances of the case, to determine the liability on the bond within the limitation of time provided [75]

Interventions Where the statutes provide for only one action on a contractor's bond and provide for intervention in such suit by other creditors, in the absence of an express limitation on the time in which creditors may intervene,[76] creditors need not intervene in the suit within the time within which the original suit could have been brought,[77] and the court may properly fix a time in which creditors may intervene extending beyond such time,[78] and it is within the discretion of the trial court to permit the filing of interventions while the suit is still pending, even though the time fixed in the order has expired [79] A general statute providing that, when service has been perfected on him as required by law, defendant shall appear and plead, answer, or demur within thirty days or be in default, does not limit the time within which interventions may be filed to thirty days before the trial [80] Where the statute does not prohibit the filing of more than one suit on the bond, it has been held that the filing of pleas in intervention must be treated as the filing of suits, and that they must be filed within the time limited for the filing of suits [81]

Premature suits Suit on a highway contractor's statutory bond before the time fixed by statute for an accrual of a cause of action thereon is premature [82]

Waiver Surety is not entitled to rely on a failure to sue on the bond within the statutory time where it was expressly agreed in a written forbearance agreement that the defense of limitations would not be pleaded [83] Failure properly to raise the question that the suit was prematurely brought may operate as a waiver thereof [84]

(7) Pleadings

The general rules of pleading apply in actions on a highway contractor's bond

The declaration, complaint, or petition in an action on a highway contractor's bond, as in other civil cases, should set forth clearly and distinctly all the material facts constituting plaintiff's cause of action [85] It is sufficient to set out the substance of amount finally owing under the contract, and it is not final payment thereon —Commonwealth to Use of Concrete Steel Co, v Globe Indemnity Co, 167 A 576, 312 Pa 244

Abandonment of contract

Under some statutes if a contractor quits or abandons the contract before its consummation, suit may be instituted by creditors on the bond of the contractor within one year after the abandonment, and a suit begun within such time is not premature —Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co v State, 76 S W 2d 492, 124 Tex 115, modifying Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co v Moberly, Civ App, 52 S W 2d 298

Final settlement

Where suit is premature if brought before final settlement, the tacit acceptance by the commissioner's court of the final estimate of the engineer as fixing the amount due under the contract is not a final settlement as contemplated by the statute The commissioner's court may be compelled, at the instance of a creditor in a proper proceeding for that purpose, to proceed to make a final settlement of the contract —Austin Bros Bridge Co v Love, Tex Com App, 34 S W 2d 574, reversing Love v Austin Bros Bridge Co, Civ App, 5 S W 2d 570

84. Tex —Detroit Fidelity & Surety Co v Pippins & Clarkson, Civ App, 47 S W 2d 886

Issue concerning premature filing of suit on road contractor's bond should be promptly raised, question involving procedure rather than substantive law, and surety, after agreed judgments were entered for numerous intervening claimants, could not, as against other interveners, claim that suit was premature —Union Indemnity Co v Ricks, 140 So 597, 224 Ala. 514

85. Amount of bond

Where the statute requires that the bond shall be conditioned on the payment of claims for all labor performed in such work, a petition alleging, in effect, that the bond was executed and delivered pursuant to the laws of the state alleges by implication that it is in an amount sufficient to cover plaintiff's claim, and is not insufficient for failure to plead the amount of the penalty of the bond —State ex rel. Concrete & Steel

the condition of the bond in general terms.[86] A breach must be so assigned as to show that the condition of the bond has been broken.[87] In declaring on a statute, use of the words of the statute is usually sufficient.[88] Where the statute requires the taking of certain steps before suit is brought as a general rule the pleadings must aver that such steps were taken,[89] and in some jurisdictions the complaint must show that suit was brought within the time limited by statute.[90] Where the original petition states a cause of action, permitting an amendment to clarify an ambiguity is proper.[91]

Where surety's complaint in an action to determine the interests of the various parties is sufficient to disclose materialmen's right to recover on the bond, it has been held that it is not necessary for such materialmen to file a counterclaim or cross complaint.[92]

Plea or answer A plea showing no more than the letting of a subcontract by the principal is insufficient to show a release of surety by the prin-

Const Co v Southern Surety Co, 294 S W 123, 221 Mo App 67

Assignment

An allegation that certain interveners were assignees of claims for material sold by other parties to the contractors was sufficient, in the absence of exceptions demanding a more particular statement of the nature and character of the assignments, their date, and whether oral or in writing—U S Fidelity & Guaranty Co v Henderson County, Tex Civ App, 253 S W 835, affirmed, Com App, 276 S W 203 in which motion is overruled, 276 S W 1119.

Publication of notice of suit

Where the purpose of a statute requiring publication of notice of the suit is to notify all persons who may have similar claims so that they may take the necessary steps to protect their interests, and where publication cannot be made until after the declaration has been filed, the sufficiency of the declaration is not dependent on the publication of the notice—Excello Feed Milling Co v U S Fidelity & Guaranty Co, 111 So 94, 145 Miss 599

Special contract

Petition held to declare on special contract with contractor, not quantum meruit—State ex rel Concrete & Steel Const Co v Southern Surety Co, 294 S W 123, 221 Mo App 67

Supplies to subcontractor

Items of material, etc, supplied by plaintiff to subcontractors should be claimed as such, and not by way of assignment to plaintiff by the subcontractors without a showing that such amounts are due to the subcontractors and that such claims were duly assigned to plaintiff—U S Fidelity & Guaranty Co v Benson Hardware Co, 132 So 622, 222 Ala 429

Uncertainty

Where it is impossible for plaintiff to amend the complaint so as to cure a defect of uncertainty as to the date materials were furnished, due to the fact that the uncertainty appeared in the notice of claim, it is proper to sustain a demurrer to the complaint—A L Young Machinery Co v Cupps, 2 P 2d 321, 213 Cal 210

Withdrawal bond

In materialman's action on contractor's withdrawal bond given to secure payment of liens proved against money due contractor from highway commission, materialman was required only to allege and prove amount of debt, that material was actually used in the highway work, and that the lien had been proved—Powell v Republic Portland Cement Co, Tex Civ App, 91 S W 2d 467, error dismissed

86. Conclusion

Since a written instrument should be pleaded according to its legal meaning and effect, a statement that surety "agreed and bound itself to pay for all material and supplies furnished and labor performed in or upon or about the construction of said highway under said contract" is sufficient, and is not objectionable as a mere conclusion of law—State ex rel Concrete & Steel Const Co v Southern Surety Co, 294 S W. 123, 221 Mo App 67

87. Allegation held sufficient

An allegation that the work and labor were performed and material furnished, for which the principal failed and refused to pay, sufficiently alleges a breach of the conditions of the bond—State ex rel. Concrete & Steel Const Co v Southern Surety Co, supra

90. Ala—Consolidated Indemnity & Insurance Co v Texas Co, 140 So. 566, 224 Ala 349

Reason for rule

"The time in which suit must be brought is not a statute of limitation, but is of the essence of the action, and the complaint must show that it is begun within that time"—John E Ballenger Const Co v Joe F Walters Const Co, 184 So 275, 276, 236 Ala 548, modifying 184 So 270, 28 Ala App 353

Exact date

It is not necessary to allege the exact date of the final settlement if its date is approximately shown and it is shown that it occurred within the time limited before suit was commenced—U S Fidelity & Guaranty Co v Yeilding Bros Co Department Stores, 143 So 176, 225 Ala 307.

Interveners

If the suit is timely begun, the status of it is fixed, and it is not necessary that interveners shall make such averment in their petitions of intervention—U S Fidelity & Guaranty Co v Yeilding Bros Co Department Stores, 143 So 176, 225 Ala 307

91. Ga—Moore v Standard Accident Ins Co, 173 S E 481, 48 Ga App 508

cipal's entering into a new contract with a third person to do the work releasing the principal [93] Where the complaint discloses a cause of action duly acquired under the bond, a plea of fraud as against plaintiff must set forth facts showing his connection with the fraud, or from which he is chargeable with the fraud [94] An affidavit of defense raising questions of law will be overruled when an issue of fact is presented [95]

Issues, proof, and variance Such matters may be considered on the trial as are properly put in issue by the pleadings [96] To be sufficient, the proof adduced must correspond with the cause of action set forth in the petition, and there cannot be a recovery on a cause of action other than that pleaded [97] An immaterial variance, however, is not fatal as a failure of proof [98] Where there is prima facie evidence that there has been compliance with statutory provisions, a failure to prove an allegation of one of the statutory requirements is not fatal [99]

(8) Evidence

As in other civil actions, plaintiff has the burden of proving his case by a preponderance of the evidence, and competent, relevant, and material evidence is admissible.

In an action on a highway contractor's bond, plaintiff has the burden of establishing his case by a fair preponderance of the evidence,[1] and this burden of proof remains on plaintiff throughout the trial [2] Accordingly plaintiff has the burden of showing the extent and validity of his claim [3] It is not necessary for a materialman to prove by direct evidence that his supplies sold for the construction of the highway, being reasonably suitable and appropriate to it, were in fact so used, if this may be inferred from the circumstances [4] If, however, the contractor is engaged in several projects under separate contracts and bonds, and the materials and supplies are sold indiscriminately without reference to one or the other job, and they are suitable for use on either, and there is nothing on which to predicate an inference that they were used on the one or the other, the materialman has the burden of proving that his supplies were used on the project covered by defendant's bond [5] The burden of overcoming a prima facie case of liability,[6] and of proving affirmative defensive matter,[7] rests on defendant

Under statute providing that, on furnishing of affidavit by person entitled to protection of highway contractor's bond that work covered by bond has been completed and accepted person entitled to protection of bond shall be furnished with certified copy of bond on which he shall have right of action against contractor and surety on bond, in action on a highway contractor's bond certified copy of bond was prima facie evidence that provisions of statute had been complied with and materialman was not required to prove an allegation of completion and acceptance of work—Western Casualty & Surety Co v Fulton Supply Co, 4 S E 2d 690, 60 Ga App 710

The usual presumptions arising in civil actions generally will be indulged in actions of this character,[8] but nothing will be presumed which is not warranted by the circumstances of the case[9]

Competent evidence which is relevant and material to the issues is admissible,[10] but incompetent, irrelevant, or immaterial evidence should be excluded[11]

8. Extension of time

Where bond permitted extension of time to principal without notice to surety and contractor was allowed to continue after expiration of time for performance it will be presumed that county granted extension, and hence surety is liable on bond for gravel furnished after expiration of originally stated time for performance—Sommers v National Surety Co, 201 N W 443, 229 Mich 422

(9) Trial

Disputed questions of fact should be left to the determination of the jury under proper instructions from the court.

Disputed questions of fact are for the determination of the jury or the trial court sitting without a jury,[13] but, where there is no substantial conflict in the evidence, the question becomes one of law, and a direction of the verdict is proper[14] The instructions to the jury, or declarations of law in trials without a jury, must state the law correctly,[15] and erroneous instructions or declarations requested are properly refused[16] The verdict must be responsive to, and sustained by, the evidence adduced at the trial[17] The verdict should not be for an amount greater than that shown by the evidence to be due plaintiff or claimant[18] The granting of a new trial is governed by the usual rules applicable thereto.[19]

Mode and conduct of trial Where the statute contemplates one proceeding on a contractor's bond in which all parties are entitled to be present and be heard, the orderly presentation of the evidence and argument touching each claim and the rendition of verdicts and judgments are largely within the discretion of the court[20] protection of the bond may be recovered, and, in a proper case, interest and attorney's fees may also be recovered.

The judgment or decree in an action on a highway contractor's bond is governed by the usual rules applicable in civil actions generally, and, in accordance with such rules, it must be responsive to, and supported by, the evidence adduced at the trial [21] Where the aggregate of claims proved exceeds the penalty of the bond, and the surety is directed to deposit the amount of the penalty with the court, it has been held that the surety has no interest in the manner of distribution of the fund [22]

Subject to the rule that recovery, as a general rule, cannot exceed the penalty of the bond,[23] the amount of recovery in an action on a highway contractor's bond is the net amount found to be due plaintiff arising from claims within the protection of the bond [24] The surety is not liable for payments by the county to the contractor which were not paid under the terms and provisions of the contract covered by the bond.[25] Permitting recovery on items which are not shown to have been entirely consumed in the course of the construction of the road project has been held to be improper.[26] Where a subcontractor's bond is made in favor of the contractor as obligee, the contractor may recover against the subcontractor and his surety in solido for all sums for which the subcontractor may be personally responsible in connection with the performance of his subcontract.[27] When a subcontractor sues on the bond for the full amount due him as such from the principal in the bond, it has been held that the surety is entitled to deductions for claims of laborers and materialmen of the subcontractor, for which the surety is directly liable [28] The amount of the claim filed with the county commissioners is not binding on a claimant suing on the contractor's bond, where he is not proceeding under an alternative statutory procedure which required the filing of claim [29]

Where the contractor abandoned the work and refused to complete it, the proper measure of damages is the difference between the original contract

Prorating

Under a statute providing that, if the recovery on the bond should be inadequate to pay the amounts found due to all creditors, judgment shall be given to each creditor pro rata of the amount of the recovery, the item of net cost to the surety for completing the project must be considered as one more claim against the penalty of the bond.—New York Indemnity Co v Niven, 133 So 261, 222 Ala 562

Freight

One furnishing material to a contractor under an agreement for sale at a certain price in addition to freight charges, which were to be advanced by the seller, is entitled to recover against surety for freight charges paid thereon, since freight charges became in effect a part of the purchase price fixed by the contract Whether the freight charges were paid in advance under agreement, or whether exacted of claimant under his liability as consignor, makes no difference.—Maryland Casualty Co v Ohio River Gravel Co, C C A W Va, 20 F 2d 514, rehearing denied, C C A, 21 F 2d 744, certiorari denied 48 S Ct 157, 275 U S 570, 72 L Ed 431

Set-offs

(1) When the contractor is indebted to a subcontractor and pays a debt of the latter for which, as surety, he is liable, he can offset the amount so paid against that which he owes the subcontractor The sureties on the contractor's bond, as supplemental sureties, may avail themselves of this equitable right of set-off.—Fidelity & Deposit Co of Maryland v McClintic-Marshall Corporation, 171 A 382, 115 N J Eq 470, affirmed 176 A 341, 117 N J Eq 440.

(2) The liability of the contractor and his sureties to the assignee of money due a subcontractor may be offset by debts of the subcontractor for which the contractor is secondarily liable and which he pays, provided the assignment was made before the subcontractor had fully performed his contract.—Fidelity & Deposit Co of Maryland v McClintic-Marshall Corporation, supra price and the cost of completion,[30] which may be the cost of completion under a second contract,[31] although such amount is greater than the reasonable value of the work, where there is no evidence of fraud or negligence,[32] or, as it has been held, the difference between the original contract price and what it would cost to complete the work according to the contract specifications, although, as completed, it cost less.[33]

Attorney's fees Where the contractor's bond or a statute so provides, a successful claimant who has been required to bring action to obtain payment is entitled to an allowance of attorney's fees,[34] and an express agreement in the bond to pay a reasonable attorney's fee for the obligee does not limit the right to recover such fee to the obligee to the exclusion of beneficiaries under the bond.[35] Where the right to recover attorney's fees is based on statute, there must be a compliance with statutory conditions before such fees may be recovered.[36] Where surety is justified in resisting claims presented, it should not be charged with attorney's fees.[37]

Actual completion of work

The measure of damages in an action on a bond for breach of a road construction contract is based on the actual cost, not the reasonable cost, of completing the work, in the absence of any showing that the advertisement and letting of the new contract was not fairly and honestly done, and it is not necessary to show that the work actually had been completed and the contract price at which it was relet actually paid.—Jackson v State, 142 N.E. 1, 194 Ind. 130

36. Amicable demand

(1) Under some statutes claimant must have made a timely amicable demand on both the contractor and surety in order that he may be allowed attorney's fees.—Long Bell Lumber Co. v S. D. Carr Const. Co., 133 So. 438, 172 La. 182.—State v. Miller, 126 So. 422, 169 La. 911.—Silver v. Harriss, 115 So. 380, 165 La. 94

(2) Presumption that demand on contractor would be without avail does not dispense with necessity of demand as condition to recovery of attorney's fees against surety.—State v. Miller supra

(3) Attorney's fees recoverable against surety on highway contractor's bond are in nature of penalty and should not be imposed without literal compliance with statute.—Long Bell Lumber Co. v. S. D. Carr Const. Co. supra

Time of commencing suit

A statute permitting the recovery of attorney's fees but providing that no such fees shall be allowed in any suit or action brought before the expiration of thirty days following the date of filing notice should not be literally read, and recovery of such fees may be permitted in a suit brought before the expiration of thirty days where contested litigation ensues.—Niemi v. Brewster, 281 P. 488, 134 Wash. 181

37. U.S.—Standard Accident Ins. Co. v Simpson, C.C.A.S.C., 64 F.2d 583, certiorari denied Carolina Contracting Co. v Standard Acc. Ins. Co., 54 S.Ct. 123, 290 U.S. 688, 78 L.Ed. 593

Full recovery

Under some statutes a claimant must recover the full amount of his recorded claim to be entitled to attorney's fees.—Louisiana Highway Commission v. McCain, 1 So.2d 545, 197 La. 359

Claimant who is not prevailing party as against surety is not entitled to judgment against surety for attorney's fees.—Goodspeed v. Duby, 283 P. 6, 131 Or. 275.

Costs. Where the surety is justified in resisting claims, it should only be charged with such part of the costs as would have been a proper charge against it if there had been no controversy over the amount of its liability.[38]

Expenses of litigation. Apart from the sums allowable and taxed as costs, there can, as a general rule, be no recovery as damages of the costs and expenses of litigation, or expenditures for counsel fees.[39] Where, however, it was necessary for claimants to coerce the state highway department into publishing notice of completion of the highway, which was a condition precedent to bringing suit on the bond, claimant is entitled to recover attorney's fees incurred in securing the publication of the notice under a bond providing for the payment of all attorney's fees that might be incurred in the enforcement of the obligations of the bond, notwithstanding a tender of the amount due claimant after the publication of notice but before suit could be brought.[40]

Interest. Where the penalty of the bond is sufficient, plaintiff is entitled to recover such interest as might have been recovered against the principal.[41] It has been held that allowed claims draw interest at least from the time suit is brought.[42] In some cases interest has been allowed from the time the accounts became due,[43] and under some statutes a claimant suing on an open account is entitled to recover interest from the date of the last item furnished.[44] Where the allowance of interest is discretionary, an allowance of interest from the date of the decree has been held not to be unreasonable.[45] A principal contractor has been held to be entitled, in an action on a subcontractor's bond, to interest on the amount of money he was required to use in the completion of the subcontract over and above the amounts he received in current payments.[46]

(8) Trial
(9) Judgment or relief

(1) Right of Action

A contractor entitled to payment for work done under a highway construction or improvement contract, or to damages for breach thereof, may enforce his right by proper action, and an action will lie against a contractor to enforce the rights of the public agency, or of subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen.

A contractor entitled, under the principles stated supra § 209, to payment for work done under a contract to construct or improve a public highway, or to damages for the breach thereof, may enforce his right by proper action,[47] such as an action on a warrant given in payment of the contract price,[48] an action for the reasonable value of necessary work done on the roads,[49] or a suit to set aside an engineer's erroneous estimate of work to be paid for[50] A road overseer, however, cannot obtain specific performance of his contract to keep county roads in repair for one year,[51] and an action will not lie against the state for representations by division and county engineers which induced the contractor to drop injunction proceedings to prevent a town's contractors from tearing down a bridge during the construction of the highway[52] Where the action is based on a contract, any recovery must be by virtue of the contract,[53] and in the absence of a valid express contract or an implied agreement to pay, plaintiff cannot recover[54] A contractor, by resuming work after suspension, does not waive his right to recover for the work done under the contract, and for damages for breach thereof, where, on resuming work, he made statements of his losses and was assured by the district that he would be indemnified therefor[55]

The public officials should enforce the contracts as made,[56] or avoid them when illegal[57] So an action will lie to recover money paid out by the public agency under a void contract employing defendant to supervise road construction[58] A statute fixing the procedure by which persons furnishing labor or materials to a highway contractor may recover the value thereof from the contractor applies to contracts made before the passage of the act as well as those made after, if suit thereon is brought after the approval of the act[59] No recovery will be allowed, in an action against the contractor for work and materials furnished, for an item exacted as a result of a supposed ability to interfere with defendant's business in obtaining road contracts[60] A subcontractor is not barred from recovering the balance due and enforcing a lien by the fact that he abandoned the work and necessitated completion thereof by the principal contractor, in the absence of a specific showing of damages sufficient to offset the amount earned under the contract[61]

(2) Conditions Precedent

In the absence of waiver, plaintiff must comply with statutory or other conditions precedent.

Before commencement of an action by the contractor to recover compensation due under the contract,[62] or damages arising out of its breach,[63]

Prerequisites to suit
Commissioner's warrant on treasurer of road fund and countersigning by town clerk and presentation for payment were held not prerequisites to suit—Euziere v Highway Com'r of Town of Rockville, 178 N E 397, 346 Ill 131, affirming 260 Ill App 29

63. W.Va.—Williams v. Lincoln

there must be a compliance with conditions precedent imposed by the contract or applicable statute, such as conditions relating to presentation of claim,[64] certification of the amount due,[65] or the provocation of concursus.[66] So where provisions of the contract requiring performance and payment are interdependent, one party to the contract cannot sue the other for a breach thereof without showing performance or tender of performance on his part as well as ability to perform.[67] A demand that the district perform its contract is not a condition precedent to a contractor's recovery of damages for the district's breach of contract, however, where the district has, in writing, acknowledged its inability to make the payments called for by the contract.[68] Although presentation of the claim to designated officers is a condition precedent to a suit on it, the contractor may bring his action without appealing from an order rejecting a claim thus presented.[69] Noncompliance with conditions precedent may be waived by the public agency,[70] and the effect of such waiver is to place the contractor in the position of having complied with the contract.[71]

Compensation for extra work Protest against erroneous directions of the engineer necessitating extra work is a condition precedent to the contractor's recovery of compensation therefor.[72]

(3) Defenses

In an action by or against a highway contractor, defendant may interpose any proper defense which goes to defeat plaintiff's right of action.

What constitutes a defense depends on local law.[73] Where presentment of the claim is a condition precedent to the maintenance of the action, nonpresentment is a matter of defense.[74] A contract between the contractor and the broker who purchased the highway district's bonds, providing that the contractor would waive damages if the district could not obtain money to complete its contract made for the benefit of the broker and not the district, is not available to the district as a defense,[75] and the contractor is not estopped from asserting the liability of the district in the absence of knowledge by the district of such agreement.[76] Where defendant has accepted material from an assignee of the contract, it is no defense to an action therefor that the requisite written consent to the assignment has not been obtained.[77] Where the contract was invalid and the contractor sues on a quantum meruit, defendant may not resort to a defense of estoppel which might be available to it in a controversy with property owners who are not parties to the action.[78]

It is no defense to an action against the contrac-

Who may waive

Where specifications, which were part of state highway construction contract, made the state highway commission's chief engineer the final administrative authority on interpretation of the specifications, the contract requirement of sixty-day notice as to condition precedent to maintenance of an action might be waived by the chief engineer who would have the right in writing to accept a letter from contractor as notice of his claim.—Spitcaufsky v State Highway Commission of Missouri, 159 S W 2d 647, 349 Mo 117.

tor for damages for breach of the contract that by reason of war conditions the costs of labor and materials has increased rendering the contract a loss to him [79] Plaintiff's failure to acquire a right of way is a defense only if such failure substantially interfered with defendant's work [80] In an action against contractors for damages for breach of the contract, it is a complete defense that the contract was invalid,[81] but in an action against highway engineers to recover excess commissions paid under their contract with plaintiff, defendants are estopped to question the validity of the contract [82] Although a statute makes the presentation of claims a condition precedent to the institution of an action thereon, such claims may be interposed as a setoff to an action by the public agency for breach of contract even though they were not presented [83]

(4) Jurisdiction

The action must be brought in a court having cognizance of the proceeding and jurisdiction of the person

An action arising out of the breach of a highway construction or improvement contract must be brought in a court having cognizance of such proceeding [84] An action by the contractor against the road improvement district for the recovery of money can be brought in a court of a county outside of the residence of the district,[85] and the district may confer jurisdiction of the person on such court by its voluntary appearance [86]

(5) Who May Sue and Be Sued; Parties

The assignee of a claim may ordinarily bring action thereon, and the public agency constructing a highway may under some statutes be sued on the contract, although the immunity of a state from suit for its torts extends to such agencies. The real parties in interest should be joined in the action.

The assignee of a claim against the public agency for building a road may maintain an action thereon,[87] but the assignee of a nonassignable contract, whom the highway commission treated as an agent of the contractor, cannot maintain an action against the commission on the ground that the commission breached its contract with the contractor [88] Under some statutes the public agency constructing a highway is subject to suit[89] and stands in a suit by the contractor in all matters respecting performance of its contract and as to breaches thereof as if it were a private party [90] The immunity of a state from suit for its torts extends to its agencies, so as to preclude an action by a paving contractor, to whom invalid certificates of indebtedness were delivered, for breach of an alleged duty to deliver valid certificates [91] A suit by a highway contractor should be against the real parties in interest [92]

The assignee of claims for labor and material furnished a contractor may bring an action thereon in his own name [93] A subcontractor stipulating to be bound by the provisions of the principal contract with the state as respects the work to be done by him did not waive his right to sue the contractor by a provision in the subcontract giving the contractor all the rights and privileges that the state had under the principal contract [94] A statute requiring that the highway commissioner be made a defendant in claimants' suits against highway contractors applies only where the commissioner's or the state's interest may be affected [95] In an action arising from failure to pay for labor and material furnished to a subcontractor, the subcontractor, the principal contractor, and the latter's surety are proper parties defendant.[96] In the absence of a decree holding such statute unconstitutional, a right of action for overcharges paid out by the highway commission belongs, after passage of an act creating a highway department as the commission's successor, to the statutory successor, and the state is not a necessary party plaintiff, and if it were, it could properly be represented by the attorney general who is also the proper representative of the highway department in the action.[97]

(6) Pleading

(a) Requisites and sufficiency in general

(b) Issues, proof, and variance

(a) Requisites and Sufficiency in General

The petition or complaint in an action by or against the contractor must state a cause of action; and defendant must properly plead such defense as he desires to assert.

In an action by the contractor against the public agency, the petition or complaint must state a cause of action.[98] It need not allege that at the time the indebtedness was incurred defendant had sufficient funds on hand or taxes levied to discharge it,[99] that the claim sued on was filed,[1] or that there was a demand for payment,[2] but where a statute prohibits full payment until the road is received as completed, the complaint in an action for the balance due must allege such receipt.[3] An allegation that defendant "cared for and maintained" the road as a public road is equivalent to a statutory requirement that it be "worked and maintained" as such.[4] It is incumbent on defendant properly to plead such defense as it desires to assert.[5]

The general rule that plaintiff must allege all issuable facts necessary to warrant the relief prayed for has been applied in an action for the price of material and supplies sold the contractor [6] In an action against the contractor for breach of contract, pleas tendered which present an erroneous construction of a paragraph of the contract should be rejected [7]

(b) Issues, Proof, and Variance

Evidence tending to support the pleadings is admissible, and the pleadings and proofs must conform, but minor discrepancies will be disregarded.

Evidence tending to support the pleadings is admissible thereunder [8] When necessary to establish the indebtedness and the legality of the contract alleged in the complaint, plaintiff must show that defendant either had funds on hand or that there was a tax levy which could be anticipated [9] Where the contractor claims recovery of the extra cost due to deviation from the survey on which the contract was based he must prove what the extra cost amounted to [10] There can be no recovery for extra work where plaintiff fails to show a supplemental agreement therefor which was required by the contract, or estoppel of defendant [11] To escape the binding effect of a decision of the engineer under the contract, the contractor must allege and prove that the decision was based on partiality, fraud, misconduct, or gross error [12] Minor variances between the pleadings and proof will be disregarded [13]

In an action by a materialman of a subcontractor whose obligation defendant, the principal contractor, had assumed when the subcontract was canceled, defendant, without having pleaded it, is entitled to show a different contract with the subcontractor than that set up by the petition [14] Where an action against the contractor by assignees of claims for labor rendered for the subcontractor was based on a contract with the subcontractor as agent of defendants and the evidence showed the subcontractor was an independent contractor, there can be no recovery [15] In an action by the public agency against the contractor for failure to proceed with the work under a contract requiring plaintiff to pay monthly installments, plaintiff must allege and prove ability to meet defendant's monthly installments [16]

(7) Evidence

(a) Presumptions and burden of proof
(b) Admissibility
(c) Weight and sufficiency

(a) Presumptions and Burden of Proof

In actions by or against a highway construction contractor, the burden is on plaintiff to establish the facts constituting a prima facie case, and on defendant to overcome it, or establish his affirmative defenses.

As in other civil actions, the burden rests on the contractor seeking to recover compensation or damages for breach of the contract to establish the facts constituting his cause of action,[17] and the burden is on defendant to establish its affirmative defenses.[18] So the burden is on the contractor relying thereon to show fraud or bad faith on the part of the district in changing engineers,[19] and a principal contractor seeking, on cross complaint, to recover from the subcontractor a penalty imposed by the state has the burden of showing that the penalty arose by reason of the subcontractor's default [20] Where the contractor has proved a valid claim to the fund held by defendant to be distributed in payment of the construction of the highway, the burden is on defendant to prove the existence of other claims of equal or greater priority [21] On proof that the tax funds allocated to highways were always expended, and that there was a deficit at all times, there is a presumption, in the absence of any other showing, that all payments made out of the fund were for bona fide bills incurred during the current year [22] Where it appears that defendant refused to permit plaintiff to use certain material under a contract requiring material equal to an accepted sample, it will be presumed that the material was rejected because it was inferior to the sample, and the burden is on the contractor, seeking damages for refusal to permit its use, to rebut the presumption [23] In an action by successful bidders to be relieved of their bid on the ground of a mistake therein, and to recover judgment in the amount of the deposit made by them which was declared forfeited by the public authority, the burden is on plaintiffs to show that they had made a mistake in their bid [24] The mere fact that subcontractors contracted to perform other comparatively small jobs does not raise a presumption that they thereby disabled themselves from performing their subcontract [25]

In an action against the contractor the burden is on plaintiff to establish the facts constituting the cause of action[26] and on defendant to establish his defense [27]

(b) Admissibility

Any relevant and competent evidence material to the issues of the case is admissible

Under the rules applicable to civil actions generally, evidence in an action by or against the contractor must be competent and relevant to the issues [28] Subject to this rule evidence is admissible to establish the contract,[29] performance in good faith as directed by defendant,[30] the amount of work completed,[31] the amount due the contractor,[32] the value of services and material furnished by a subcontractor,[33] the manner in which a subcontractor was to be paid,[34] waiver of notice of claim,[35] reasons for the contractor's delay,[36] ratification of the contract,[37] and the reasonable cost of the work, as bearing on the question of prospective profits [38] In an action to set aside the estimate of the engineer in charge for defendant, engineers who measured plaintiff's work in an attempt to reach a settlement as to the amount due may testify to facts thus ascertained [39] In an action by the contractor to recover overpayments to a subcontractor pursuant to a resurvey of the work, testimony relevant on the issue of the correctness of the resurvey is admissible [40] In an action by a road supervisor to recover compensation for his service, evidence that the road was not constructed according to specifications is admissible as going to the value of the services rendered [41]

(c) Weight and Sufficiency

(8) Trial

The order of proof is largely within the discretion of the court, the issues should be submitted together with proper instructions, questions of fact should be determined by the jury, and questions of law, by the court; and the verdict must conform to the issues and proof.

In actions by or against highway contractors, the order of proof is largely within the discretion of the trial court.[50] The parties are entitled to have their theories presented to the jury under correct instructions,[51] and instructions which respond to the issues made by the pleadings and the evidence and correctly submit those issues to the jury are properly given [52] However, in accordance with the well settled rules of practice, the instructions must be strictly confined to the issues and proof [53] It is the province of the jury to determine disputed questions of fact,[54] but it is the province of the court, and not the jury, to construe unambiguous provisions of the contract [55] If there is no material question of fact for submission to the jury on which there is any substantial controversy, the court may direct a verdict [56] The verdict and findings must conform to the issues and proof [57] Where the contract on which the claim is based is invalid, a finding of the jury that plaintiff performed services and furnished material worth the amount sued for furnishes no basis requiring a judgment for plaintiff [58] In an action by a subcontractor against the contractor for extra expense in the performance of the subcontract, the cost to the subcontractor may be found fair and reasonable for such work, where the method of performance was that used by the subcontractor on other highways without objection by the contractor [59] On the trial of an appeal from an award to a landowner for the removal of gravel for the repair of a highway, all pleadings and papers in the transcript on appeal are a part of the record and may be considered by the jury without being formally introduced in evidence.[60]

(9) Judgment or Relief

The judgment and the relief awarded should conform to the issues, proof, and findings, and a decree not procured by fraud or collusion is conclusive where no appeal was taken.

As in other civil actions the judgment should conform to the issues, proof, and findings [61] Where a contractor's suit for the balance due is dismissed on exception his right, if any, to resort to other proceedings should be reserved [62] In an action by successful bidders to be relieved of their bid on the ground of a mistake therein, and to recover judgment in the amount of the deposit made by them which was declared forfeited by the public agency, where plaintiffs had made a larger deposit than was required by statute, an attempted forfeiture of the entire deposit is improper, and a judgment dismissing the action on findings for defendant is improper, plaintiff being entitled to recover the amount of the deposit in excess of the amount required to be deposited [63] A decree not procured by fraud or collusion is conclusive where no appeal was taken [64] A claimant against a highway contractor who is not entitled to protection of the bond has been permitted, in a concursus proceeding, to recover personal judgment against the contractor, rather than to require a separate action to obtain such judgment.[65]

Review. In the absence of evidence as to correct engineering practices, a reviewing court cannot conclude, from the fact that numerous changes in plans were made, that they were unwarranted and the result of caprice or ill will on the part of the engineer.[66]

b. Action to Enforce Lien or Impound Funds

An action to enforce a lien on funds owing to a highway contractor or to impound such funds in the hands of the public agency will lie when it has been authorized by statute and when there has been a compliance with statutory conditions precedent, and in such an action, general rules as to parties, pleading, evidence, and relief awarded are applicable

An action to establish a lien on moneys due or to become due to the contractor is a species of garnishment [67] It will not lie in the absence of compliance with conditions precedent imposed by statute,[68] such as conditions relating to the filing of notice [69] In the absence of statute, a suit in equity will not lie to impound funds in the hands of the public agency for the benefit of parties furnishing labor or material to a defaulting road contractor,[70] the reason for the rule being that in the absence of statute such funds are not subject to garnishment [71] To assert a statutory right to impound such funds, plaintiff must proceed in the statutory manner,[72] and within the time specified in the statute after service of notice of the claim,[73] and failure of plaintiff to allege that the claim was disputed by the contractor does not render the statute of limitations inapplicable although the statute expressly provides for the remedy where the contractor disputes such claim, since the fact that it is necessary to bring the action shows that there is a dispute within the meaning of the statute[74] The proceeding must be brought in a court having cognizance thereof[75] The rights of the surety on the contractor's bond are not involved in a suit to establish a lien;[76] but in an action to foreclose a lien filed against moneys in the hands of the general contractor belonging to a subcontractor, which lien arose out of a contract between the lienor and the subcontractor, the general contractor and the subcontractor are proper parties defendant[77] Plaintiff must allege all issuable facts necessary to warrant the relief prayed for[78] In proceedings to charge retained percentages, a petition setting up a claim on notes and facts showing that notes were given for material and equipment is a suit on the notes alone rather than a suit on the original cause of action[79] Under pleadings to enforce a lien for particular work, the question whether machinery was used in work for which no lien can be claimed cannot arise[80] The general rules of evidence are applicable[81] The court will grant such relief as is appropriate,[82] but the relief granted should not extend beyond that prayed for in the pleadings,[83] nor will the court grant relief to which the petitioner has not shown himself to be entitled[84]

§ 212. Liability for Damages

a In general
b Particular political division or agency; contractors

a. In General

In general, under or apart from statute, a county or other political subdivision or governmental agency may be liable for damage to property rights resulting from construction or maintenance of highways, but it will not be liable, in the absence of statute, for damage resulting from tortious acts

Apart from the duty to compensate landowners for property taken for public highways under the constitutional right of eminent domain, and the corresponding liability for damages for injury to rights of ownership and use of property so taken, see Eminent Domain §§ 110–135, it has been held, under or apart from statute to that effect, that a county or other political subdivision or governmental agency may be liable for damage to property rights resulting from the construction, improvement, or repair of

ble for damages caused by its officers acting without authority,[99] unless the work is accepted and ratified,[1] or was done with the implied knowledge of the authorities.[2]

Liability of individuals While liability generally rests on the municipality, yet individuals also may be liable under some circumstances for damages caused by road work.[3] However, hands employed in opening a road, present in response to a summons from the overseer which required their attendance, are not personally liable to an owner trespassed on by the opening of the road.[4] The liability of contractors is considered infra subdivision b of this section.

b. Particular Political Division or Agency; Contractors

The particular political subdivision or governmental agency liable for damages caused by construction or maintenance of highways depends on constitutional or statutory provision. As between the contractor and the highway authority, liability generally depends on whether the contractor properly performed the work in accordance with the contract.

The particular political subdivision or agency liable for damages caused by the construction, improvement, or repair of a highway,[5] and the particular fund from which such damages are payable,[6] depend on the applicable constitutional or statutory provisions. Where, by statute, the jurisdiction of counties over highways has been transferred to another governmental agency, such as the highway commission or department, such agency, and not the counties, will be liable for damage resulting from the construction and maintenance of highways.[7] Moreover, a county or other political subdivision which is, under statute so providing, liable for the cost of acquiring a right of way for a highway, and for damages incurred in that connection, is not thereby rendered liable for damages resulting from the construction work which another agency plans and performs,[8] as where such other agency,[9] or its

2. Knowledge of one commissioner

Where county employees with knowledge and consent of county commissioner and engineer and road superintendent of county precinct wrongfully removed gravel from property of railroad company and used it on county roads, the county was liable to railroad company on quantum meruit for the reasonable value of gravel, and county could not avoid liability on ground that by statute all road materials must be purchased by commissioners' court and that the commissioners' court did not sanction appropriation and all commissioners did not have knowledge of it, since the commissioners' court was charged with knowledge where one commissioner had actual knowledge of appropriation and daily work-reports showing source of the gravel used on roads were filed with county, nor could liability be avoided on the ground that knowledge was acquired only after the gravel had been used in the road, since they could have returned an equivalent amount of gravel similar to that appropriated.—Harris County v. Federal agency

A county is not liable for damage to house and lot in city as result of negligent blasting by works progress administration employees in constructing abutting county road under either respondeat superior doctrine or statute requiring county to pay

contractor,[10] causes damage by its negligence Under statute providing that the county shall be liable for damages as to property taken by the secretary of highways in accordance with plans to which the county authorities agree, a county will not be liable for damages for the taking of property where the county's agreement was not acquired in accordance with the statutory provisions[11]

Liability of contractors. Whether the contractor can be held responsible for damage resulting from road construction work depends on the nature of the act causing the damage[12] Generally, where a contractor performs the construction work in accordance with its contract with, and the plans of, the highway authorities, the highway authorities,[13] and not the contractor,[14] are liable for damage to property resulting from the construction. Thus, the highway authority is liable for damage resulting from improper method of construction when manner in which work is done is under the direction of the county;[15] and this is so even though the injury might have been avoided by the exercise of due care on the part of the contractor[16] Moreover, the highway authority will be liable for damage caused by acts of the contractor which, although not specifically provided for by the contract, were necessary and not tortious[17]

However, the contractor, and not the highway authority,[18] is liable for damages resulting from his own tortious acts in the performance of the contract, as where he is negligent,[19] or commits an unauthorized trespass on the property off the right of

Effect of contract provisions

(1) The provision in a contract for construction of state highway, which provided that contractor should take every precaution to protect and preserve pipe lines from injury or damage during construction operations, in no way enlarged liability of contractor for damage to pipe lines, but made contractor liable for failure to use ordinary care in performance of contract work —Marin Municipal Water Dist v Peninsula Paving Co, 94 P 2d 404, 34 Cal App 2d 647

(2) Contractor lowering grade of highway pursuant to contract with state, thereby preventing landowners from passing between their land and highway, was not liable to landowners under contractor's agreement with state to repair damage to adjacent property injured by process of construction, "process" meaning method of operation incident to accomplishment of result —Panhandle Const Co v Shireman, Tex Civ App, 80 S W 2d 461

way [20] Even though the highway authority may be immune from liability for damage, such immunity is not shared by the contractor [21] The contractor has been held not to be liable for injury occurring after he has completed the work and turned it over to the highway authorities, even though the injury resulted from his failure properly to carry out the contract [22]

It has been held that where the damage results from the negligence of the contractor or his employees acting in the scope of their authority and employment, both the contractor and the county are liable therefor,[23] and the highway authority and the contractor may both be liable as joint tort-feasors, where the contractor knowingly commits a trespass at the direction of the authority [24] It has also been held that the contractor may be secondarily liable for performance of the work in accordance with the plans or directions of the highway authority, as where the authority directs him to go on, or take possession of, land which it had no right to take or enter [25]

Where the negligence of the county and of the contractor caused the damage, it is incumbent on the county to segregate the amount of damage caused by each in order to relieve itself from liability for the entire damage [26]

§ 213. Damages

Liability for damages for injury resulting from the construction, improvement, or maintenance of highways is considered supra § 212, and payment or assessment of damages as a prerequisite to beginning road work, the measure of damages, and actions or proceedings to recover damages, are considered infra §§ 214, 215, 216, respectively.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 214. —— Payment or Assessment as Prerequisite to Road Work

Under some statutes road work may not be begun until the payment, tender, or assessment of damages, or other arrangement with the landowner.

Under statutes so providing, road work may not be begun until the landowner is protected, as by payment,[27] tender,[28] or assessment,[29] unless there has been a release,[30] or agreement,[31] as to damages, or the owner has conveyed the property to the town for a road, and expressed a willingness to relinquish his right thereto [32]

§ 215. —— Measure of Damages; Deduction of Benefits

In general, the measure of damages for injury to property is the difference between the market value of the land before and after the injury.

In general, the measure of damages for injury to property in connection with the construction, improvement, and repair of highways is the difference between the market value of the land before and after the injury [33] Where a leasehold was damaged, it was held that the measure of damages is the amount reasonably necessary to put the property in substantially as good condition as it was immediately before the injuries occurred [34] In computing damages for the destruction of property interfering with road construction or alteration, re-

§ 216. —— Actions or Proceedings to Recover

a In general
b Arbitration or compromise

a. In General

Subject to statutory exception, rules governing procedure in civil actions and proceedings generally apply in actions or proceedings to recover damages for injury resulting from construction, improvement, or repair of highways.

Where the remedy for damage resulting from the construction, improvement, or repair of highways is provided by statute, the statutory method of procedure is exclusive[37] Apart from statute, the remedies available to an owner for the recovery of his damages include an action at law,[38] such as trespass,[39] or mandamus[40]

The analogous remedies and proceedings where property is taken or injured under the right of eminent domain are considered in Eminent Domain §§ 389–448, and remedies and proceedings where damages are sought against a municipal corporation for injury resulting from the construction or improvement of public works are considered in the C J S title Municipal Corporations §§ 1280–1289, also 44 C J p 470 note 20–p 480 note 93 Remedies and proceedings for damages for injury in connection with the drainage of highways are considered supra §§ 186, 187

Conditions precedent Under statutes so providing, it is a condition precedent to suit against a county or other political subdivision or agency that the claim be presented to the proper authorities in accordance with the statutory requirements[41]

In Georgia

(1) Under statute requiring state highway board to defend suit and be responsible for damages awarded against any county whenever cause of action originates on highways over which board has assumed jurisdiction, the remedy is suit against county in the local courts for the whole damage, and county may vouch board into court as provided by statute, whereupon board must defend suit and be liable for damages recovered against county —Taylor v Richmond County, 196 S E 37, 185 Ga 610, certified question conformed to 196 S E 303, 57 Ga App 586—Felton Farm Co v Macon County, 175 S E 29, 49 Ga App 239—Page v Washington County, 173 S E 568, 48 Ga App 791

(2) Under this statute, landowners suggesting vouching into court of highway board could sue county for damages to land from construction of state-aid road by county authorities under contract with highway board, notwithstanding state highway department had title, control, and supervision of road and its construction —Felton Farm Co v Macon County, supra

(3) However, where state highway board took rock from land not on a highway and used rock in construction of a road, landowner's cause of action for damages for taking of the rock did not originate "on highways" within statute making state highway department responsible for all damages awarded against any county whenever cause of action originates on highways, and hence landowner properly brought suit against highway board in county of residence of a member thereof at time suit was instituted —State Highway Board of Georgia v Hall, 20 S E 2d 21, 193 Ga 717, affirming Hall v State Highway Board, 17 S E 2d 291, 66 Ga App 190

Manner of presentation

Under statute requiring the presentation of claims, claims for damages resulting from negligent construction of highways may be presented orally in commissioners' court —Southern Surety Co v McGuire, Tex Civ App, 275 S W 845

Time of presentation

Under statute requiring presentation and filing of claim before board of county commissioners within sixty days after claim accrued, as condition precedent to action against the county, where property owners filed damage claims against county after nonnegligent construction of city's pipe line in highway, but more than six months before county performed improvement work which deprived abutting owners of access to highway damage actions were not maintainable against county —Holmquist v Queen City Const Co, 27 P 2d 1066, 175 Wash 681

period fixed by law[42] after layout[43] and entry.[44]

Jurisdiction and venue. The jurisdiction and venue of proceedings for damages generally depend on local statutes[45]

Parties No one except the parties entitled to receive the amount of the damages may maintain any form of action requiring the payment thereof[46] In an action against a township the supervisors are not necessary parties[47] Where the highway authority and the contractor are jointly liable, either or both may be made parties defendant at the election of the injured party[48]

Notice In a statutory proceeding to assess damages seasonable notice thereof must be given to all persons interested,[49] and also, it has been held, to the town,[50] unless the town is not interested[51]

Pleading. Rules governing pleadings in civil actions generally have been applied in actions for damages for injury resulting from the construction, improvement, or repair of highways[52] A declaration or complaint for consequential injuries must allege a physical invasion of or trespass on the property, or malice or negligence in the prosecution or management of the work,[53] and also the negligent act of omission or commission that proximately caused the injury complained of,[54] and it should allege the availability of funds for the payment of damages[55] A complaint against a town for certain acts of trespass committed by the highway officers must allege that the town authorized the acts, or ratified them after commission[56] The pleading must conform to the proof[57]

Evidence. Rules of evidence governing civil actions generally have been applied in actions for damages for injury resulting from the construction, improvement, or repair of highways[58]

Review Rules governing proceedings for review in civil actions generally have been applied in actions for damages for injury resulting from the construction, improvement, or repair of highways[60]

b. Arbitration or Compromise

Claims for damages may be submitted to arbitration or compromised.

The proper officers may submit claims for damages for injury resulting from the construction, improvement, or repair of highways to arbitration,[64] or may make agreements of compromise thereof.[65]

VIII. OBSTRUCTION AND ENCROACHMENT

Sovereign interest

The state's rights in a public highway differ in no material respect from any other of its manifold sovereign interests and concerns—State v Paul, 214 P 425, 113 Kan 412

The purpose of the statute declaring it a public nuisance to obstruct or render dangerous the exercise of the public right of passage on a highway is to secure to every one an enjoyment of a public right—Hanson v. Hall, 279 N.W. 227, 202 Minn. 381.

is unlawful,[67] and constitutes a nuisance.[68] Where such power is conferred by statute, the highway commission has authority to preserve the highways from destruction or deterioration, and the authority also to forestall and prevent encroachment that would prove deleterious to the highways, or detrimental to the use thereof by the general public.[69]

One tearing up or cutting through a highway must ordinarily restore it to as good condition as before, unless relieved from such duty by contract, judgment, or otherwise.[70]

§ 218. What Constitutes

An unlawful obstruction or encroachment may consist of anything rendering the highway less commodious or convenient for public use, even though located outside of the traveled part, but incidental or partial obstructions may not be illegal, depending on the particular circumstances of the case, if they do not unreasonably interfere with the rights of the public and are not unduly prolonged.

Not every obstruction to the use of a highway is illegal. Public highways are subject to such incidental or partial obstructions as necessity requires provided they do not unreasonably interfere with the rights of the public and are not unduly prolonged.[71] As to what is a proper obstruction, as being based on a reasonable and necessary use, it is impossible to lay down any general rule, each case depending on its own particular circumstances,[72]

"Purpresture"

Any encroachment on a public street or highway is a "purpresture," and, if the public use is impeded or rendered less commodious, such encroachment is generally not only a purpresture, but also technically a "public nuisance," regardless of the degree of interference with the common enjoyment, but not every "purpresture" is a "public nuisance," and whether or not it is such a nuisance will be determined according to the particular facts.—Southeastern Pipe Line Co. v. Improvements and repairs

The county officials have a lawful right temporarily to obstruct highways under their jurisdiction for purpose of making improvements and repairs, and this right, when properly exercised, is paramount to the right of the public to free and unobstructed travel.—Shepard v. Utah Light & Traction Co., 184 P. 542, 55 Utah 186.

Sidewalk

A public road or sidewalk is primarily intended for public travel and the right to obstruct it even temporarily and in part must be exercised in a reasonable manner, and with due regard to the paramount rights and safety of the public.—Massey v. Worth, 197 A. 673, 9 W.W.Harr., Del., 211.

and the question being as a rule determinable by the jury.[73]

In general it may be said that an unlawful obstruction or encroachment may consist of anything which renders the highway less commodious or convenient for the use of the public,[74] such as buildings or other structures,[75] projections over the highway,[76] ditches and excavations under or across highways,[77] fences,[78] gates,[79] walls,[80] or untrimmed hedges or brush growing on the highway.[81]

Fences or gates may be so situated, however, as not to constitute obstructions.[82] Also, if the highway officer in opening the highway removes fences off the line of the survey, the landowner is not liable to indictment for replacing them.[83] Such owner may move his fence to correspond with the proper line of the highway;[84] but after the highway has been used with the fence on a particular line for a sufficient length of time to give prescriptive rights to the public, the owner cannot move his fence forward so as to narrow the road.[85] The failure to remove a fence or other obstruction which was in the highway at the time it was established has been held not to be unlawful,[86] at least until notice to remove has been given by the proper officers.[87]

One is not justified in obstructing a highway because he leaves sufficient room for the passage of the public.[88] An obstruction placed anywhere within the highway limits,[89] although outside of the traveled part,[90] may constitute a nuisance. The same is true of any object placed close to the roadway, constituting a present[91] source of danger.[92]

On the other hand, trees and shrubs,[93] log chutes,[94] hitching posts and horse blocks,[95] and other objects,[96] placed on the side of the road so as not to interfere with the use of the highway, are not unlawful obstructions. Interference with a drainage system or other acts causing water to flow over a highway constitute unlawful obstruction or encroachment,[97] although it has been held that the obstruction of the mouth of a slough is not an obstruction of a road, even though it results in washing out the road at high water.[98] A person is not guilty of obstructing a highway because, by threats, he causes a road officer to desist from removing an obstruction.[99]

§ 219. Existence or Legality of Highway

To render the obstruction of a road a public offense or nuisance it must be shown that the road is an actually existing public highway, and an obstruction is not unlawful if the highway was never actually opened or was legally discontinued or abandoned; but, if the highway has a legal existence, it is ordinarily immaterial how it was established, and the proceedings for establishment are not subject to collateral attack unless entirely void for want of jurisdiction.

established,[3] whether by statutory proceedings,[4] by dedication,[5] provided the dedication has been accepted,[6] or by recognition, user, or prescription[7]

It is no defense that the highway is less than the statutory width,[8] and one is not justified in obstructing a highway as opened and traveled merely because it does not correspond with the road as established[9] On the other hand the fact that the road was traveled for a greater width than laid out has been held not to subject a person to a penalty for obstructing the extra width[10] It is immaterial that there is a dispute as to the existence of the highway[11] or that the person causing the obstruction had no actual notice that the highway existed[12]

Abandonment or nonuser If the road,[13] or the portion obstructed,[14] has been legally discontinued or abandoned, there is no liability The burden of proof, however, is on one charged with obstructing a highway to show vacation or abandonment thereof[15]

The fact that the road is little used,[16] or that travel is diverted elsewhere,[17] does not authorize the obstruction of a highway if it has not been legally surrendered or vacated, although it has been held that, where a penalty is provided for obstructing a road "to the hindrance or inconvenience of travellers," defendant can show that there was another road shorter than the one obstructed which travelers might have used and did use without inconvenience[18]

Vacation. An obstruction is not justified by a proceeding for vacation which was absolutely void,[19] or by an order of vacation which did not become effective,[20] or was subsequently revoked[21]

Defects in statutory proceedings In the case of a highway established by statutory proceedings the general rule prohibiting a collateral attack thereon applies, and consequently on an issue as to one's liability for obstructing a highway it is not permissible to question the validity of the establishment,[22] unless the proceedings were entirely void for want of jurisdiction[23]

It may, it seems, be shown that the establishment was on a condition which has not been complied with,[24] and one who is alleged to have obstructed a highway laid out across his land may show that he received no notice of the proceedings for establishment,[25] or that his property was never condemned for highway purposes.[26] However, the defense of want of notice cannot be raised by a grantee of the person who owned the land when the highway was established,[27] or by a subsequent occupant of the land,[28] or by a person having no interest in the land taken for the road.[29]

A landowner has been held liable for obstructing a road established without compensating him,[30] although there is authority to the contrary.[31] However, a grantee cannot defend on the ground that no compensation was made to his grantor.[32]

It has been held sufficient prima facie evidence of the existence of the highway to produce the order establishing the road together with evidence that it has been used as such,[33] and this is undoubtedly the rule where there is a statutory provision to such effect.[34]

Highways not opened It is generally held that an illegal obstruction of a highway cannot occur unless the highway has been actually opened and rendered passable for travelers,[35] a partial opening, however, is apparently sufficient,[36] and a few cases hold or imply that the opening of the highway is immaterial.[37]

Generally, an unlawful obstruction is not justified on the ground of custom, convenience or necessity, ownership of the fee, existence of another road, or mere lapse of time; but an obstruction may be authorized by act of legislature or by the municipality affected, although such authority is strictly construed and cannot be exercised in such a manner as to constitute a source of danger to the public or to prevent the ordinary use of the highway.

An unlawful obstruction is not justified on the ground of convenience or necessity,[38] or that it is the custom of the neighborhood to create such obstructions,[39] or that there are other similar obstructions on the same road.[40] So, in a proceeding to recover a fine for damaging a highway by its unusual use in hauling, and refusing to repair it, it is no defense that hauling by others also damaged the road, unless the particular damage alleged in the petition was caused by such other hauling,[41] nor is one estopped to complain of an obstruction by the fact that he himself has obstructed another part of the road.[42]

Ownership of the fee by the person creating an obstruction is no defense,[43] although, as appears supra § 142, he has the full right to use the land provided he does not obstruct travel. It is no defense that another road exists,[44] so that an obstruction is not justified by the fact that defendant has opened a new road equally convenient.[45]

Authorized obstructions Obstructions in a highway may be authorized by act of legislature,[46] or

Pipe line
Statute was not intended absolutely to prohibit pipe line above highway, if reasonably elevated, and if permit was obtained, respecting like-

by the municipality in which the road lies.[47] Such authority, however, must be strictly construed[48] and cannot lawfully be exercised in such a manner as to constitute a source of danger to the public,[49] or prevent the ordinary use of the highway.[50]

Highway officers have no power to surrender the use of the highway for private purposes,[51] or to authorize a nuisance on the highway.[52] If the public authorities, in authorizing an obstruction, exceed their powers, such obstruction will be illegal,[53] nor can an illegal obstruction be justified by matters occurring thereafter and subsequent to the commencement of a prosecution therefor.[54] Although a dam authorized by the legislature is not a public nuisance for which indictment or injunction will lie, a county lihood of obtaining statutory permit, if requested, maintenance of pipe line twelve and one half feet above highway for seventeen years without protest or accident conclusively showed that elevation was reasonably sufficient—Rossville Commercial Alcohol Corporation v Dennis Sheen Transfer Co, 138 So 183, 18 La App 725

whose highway is flooded may nevertheless sue for damages.[55]

Prescriptive right. No right to maintain an encroachment on or obstruction in a highway by an individual can be gained by mere lapse of time, and acquiescence,[56] unless by statute,[57] and a statute under which an individual may acquire such a right will be strictly construed.[58]

§ 221. Persons Liable

Anyone who causes or permits an obstruction to be placed on a public highway or who maintains an obstruction placed there by someone else is liable therefor.

Anyone who causes or permits an obstruction to be placed on a public highway,[59] or who maintains an obstruction placed there by someone else,[60] is liable therefor Thus the owner is liable where a contractor abandons a contract to move a building or material and leaves it in the road,[61] and a landowner is similarly liable for the acts of his licensee[62] So one may be guilty of obstructing a highway where he orders or consents to the felling of timber on his property which falls so as to obstruct the highway, and he makes no attempt to remove such obstruction[63] One cannot, however, excuse his obstruction of the highway by showing that the person who owned the particular articles told him to place them in the highway.[64]

Corporations are liable in the same manner as natural persons,[65] and a township may itself be liable[66]

§ 222. Remedies

The legislature may provide remedies for the removal of obstructions on highways but generally such remedies are the concern of the public authorities and may not be exercised by private individuals unless they suffer special injury to their rights not common to the public.

The legislature may validly require the removal of obstructions and encroachments on highways and provide remedies for carrying out such object[67] As a general rule, the unlawful obstruction of a public highway is a matter for the public authorities and not a matter of which private individuals may complain unless they suffer some direct and special injury to their rights, not common to the public[68]

§ 223. —— Actions and Proceedings to Compel Removal in General

When authorized by statute, the removal of an obstruction may be sought in a civil action or proceeding maintained by a public officer or by an individual injuriously affected, such a proceeding should include proper notice to parties interested, and should be tried on sufficient pleadings and on competent and sufficient evidence, and the decision reached is subject to proper review.

When authorized by statute, a civil action lies to compel the removal of obstructions in a highway[69] Such action may be brought by the proper officer acting for the state, county, or municipality having rights in the highway,[70] or in a proper case by individuals injuriously affected[71] Ejectment by a township will lie against those encroaching on a highway[72]

In a number of jurisdictions the statutes provide for special proceedings of a summary nature,[73] where the location of a highway is not in question[74]

Proceedings to compel removal of obstructions should include proper notice to parties interested,[75] should be tried by the tribunal appointed by statute,[76] on sufficient pleadings,[77] describing the obstruction and its location,[78] and on competent[79] and sufficient[80] evidence. The findings should be specific,[81] and will be binding on the parties[82]

The decision as to removal may usually be reviewed by appeal[83] or by certiorari[84] The allowance of costs is generally a matter of statutory regulation[85]

§ 224. —— Preliminary Notice or Order to Remove

Under statutes governing proceedings by officers, it is required, in cases covered by the statute, that the person creating the obstruction be given proper and sufficient preliminary notice or order to remove the obstruction before action may be instituted against him for removal, or to recover a penalty, or before indictment or summary removal

The statute, in providing for proceedings by the officers, frequently requires a preliminary notice or order to the person creating the obstruction, requiring him to remove it[86] Such notice may be necessary before action for removal,[87] or to recover a penalty,[88] or before indictment[89] or summary removal[90]

However, the requirement is limited to the cases covered by the statute, and under the circumstances of the particular case notice has been held unnecessary[91] before summary removal,[92] indictment,[93] or suit to remove,[94] or before an action for a penalty.[95]

The order or notice to remove obstructions in highways should be issued by the proper court[96] and served on the party interested,[97] and must be in the form required by statute,[98] containing a specific description of the encroachment,[99] stating the legal width of the highway,[1] allowing a proper length of time for removal,[2] and ordering the removal to be made at the proper time[3] However, the fact that the notice is not sufficiently definite will not, it seems, make the highway officer removing an obstruction a trespasser[4]

§ 225. —— Summary Removal without Legal Formality

As a general rule, public highway authorities have power to effect the summary removal of obstructions, and their decision that a structure is a nuisance is ordinarily conclusive, although they are liable for an abuse of authority A traveler actually hindered, or one specially injured, may personally remove an obstruction, but decisions differ as to whether one not specially injured may personally abate an obstruction obstructions have authority under their general powers or by express statutory provisions summarily to remove obstructions,[5] notwithstanding the statute gives a remedy by action for a penalty.[6] However, such authority does not exist where the road is not open and legal,[7] or where the obstruction is not a nuisance.[8]

While the decision of highway officers that a structure is an obstruction is generally conclusive,[9] nevertheless they are liable for an abuse of authority or wanton acts in the exercise thereof.[10] Such liability will not attach, however, to the person who notified the officer to remove the obstruction, but did not participate in its actual removal.[11]

Statutes sometimes provide that, on receiving notice to remove, the landowner may prevent summary action by serving on the road officers a notice of his claim of right,[12] but failure to give the notice will not estop the owner from setting up his title.[13]

By private person. A traveler actually hindered may personally remove an obstruction in a highway,[14] as may anyone else if specially injured,[15] but it is a condition to the exercise of the right that the removal does not involve a breach of the peace, and that due care is exercised in effecting the removal.[16]

It has been held, on the other hand, that a private citizen not impeded in his progress traveling on the highway and not showing any special interest or injury may not personally abate an obstruction.[17] In such circumstances, the statutory remedy must be followed, and an individual has no right to take the law into his own hands.[18] However, there are cases which uphold the doctrine that special damage is not necessary to permit one to remove an obstruc-

"There are circumstances where at common law a private subject had the right to abate a public nuisance in a public highway . . . but, unless the private subject had occasion to make use of the highway or if the obstruction did not impede his progress traveling on the highway, he was required to leave the public injury to be redressed by the public authorities. It was the existence of an emergency which justified interference by the individual, and the right of a private citizen to abate the obstruction or encroachment was limited by the necessities of the case".—Muir v. tion,[19] and which hold that a statute providing for removal of obstructions by the highway officers is merely cumulative, and does not prevent their removal by an individual.[20]

§ 226. —— Injunction in General

a. In general
b By private person

a. In General

On suit by the proper public authority, injunction will commonly lie to compel the removal of an unauthorized obstruction from a legally existing public highway on showing special damage, an irreparable injury, and the nonexistence of an adequate remedy at law; in a proper case, injunction will also lie to restrain the unlawful removal of an alleged obstruction or encroachment.

Injunction will commonly lie to compel the removal of an obstruction[21] from a legally existing public highway,[22] on showing special damage,[23] an irreparable injury,[24] and the nonexistence of an adequate remedy at law,[25] although in some cases injunction has been held to be a cumulative remedy.[26] However, the court cannot restrain the maintenance of an obstruction authorized by statute[27] Where an injunction has issued, further litigation in respect of the public rights may be enjoined.[28]

The rule applicable to nuisances generally, that when the question of right is not clear it must usually be first established at law before a resort to equity, see the C J S title Nuisances § 117, also 46 C J. p 773 note 25–p 775 note 54, applies in suits to enjoin obstructions in highways,[29] unless there is some statutory provision to the contrary.[30]

Who may sue The suit for injunction may be brought at the instance of the public authority charged with the power and duty to establish and maintain public highways,[31] or, in a proper case, by a private individual specially damaged by the obstruction, as discussed infra subdivision b of this section So suit may be brought on behalf of the state,[32] either by the attorney general[33] or by or on the relation of the prosecuting attorney of the county in which the highway is located [34]

Such suit may also be brought by a county,[35] although it has been held that county commissioners cannot maintain such suit in the absence of statutory authority,[36] especially where the obstruction is on a road under the supervision and control of some governmental agency other than the county [37] The suit may also be brought by a township,[38] or by road officers,[39] although there is authority to the contrary [40] The United States has an interest in a highway built with federal aid entitling it to sue for an injunction [41]

The removal of obstructions and encroachments may be restrained by injunction where it appears that the legal existence of the highway is in doubt, or that the obstruction complained of is maintained under a valid statute, or that officers are proceeding in an unlawful manner [42]

b. By Private Person

A private individual is entitled to an injunction against encroachments or obstructions on an existing public highway, in a plain case, when, and only when, he shows that he has sustained special damage, that there is no adequate remedy at law, that injunction is necessary to preserve his rights from irreparable injury, and that he is not estopped by his actions from securing relief.

Where a road is shown to be an existing public highway,[43] a private individual is entitled to an injunction against encroachments or obstructions thereon when, and only when, he has sustained special damage,[44] different not merely in degree but in kind from that suffered by the public at large,[45]

but the rule requiring proof of special injury does not apply where plaintiff, in a prior suit, was adjudged to have an easement in the highway.[46]

Where an obstruction cuts off access to property used for business or other purposes, injunction will lie on the ground of special damage.[47] So, where a property owner by reason of such obstruction is compelled to take a more circuitous route in order to reach his property, he sustains a special injury different from that suffered by the general public, and may maintain an action to have the obstruction removed.[48] On the other hand it has been held that a property owner has no right of action where the obstruction does not prevent access to his land but merely causes him personal inconvenience in being compelled to take a more circuitous route in going from his property to necessary points.[49] A mere traveler on the highway cannot bring an action to abate an obstruction unless he shows some injury greater than personal inconvenience suffered by the necessity of taking a more circuitous route in reaching his destination.[50]

In addition to proving special damage plaintiff must show that he has no adequate remedy at law,[51] and that the injunction is necessary to preserve his rights[52] from irreparable injury[53] in a plain case,[54] having due regard to the public interest.[55] It has been held that recovery will be denied where plaintiff is estopped to complain of the obstruction,[56] as where he himself is an obstructor,[57] or has delayed applying for relief,[58] but it has also been held that one cannot be estopped from insisting on the maintenance of a road by the fact that he has permitted another to improve the land covered by the road.[59] The complaining party is not required first to apply to the municipal authorities for relief before bringing suit.[60]

§ 227. —— Proceedings to Enjoin

An action to enjoin the obstruction of a highway is within the jurisdiction of a court of general equity jurisdiction. The bill must join all necessary parties, and allege all facts necessary to establish the right to relief, and the proceedings must conform with general rules in respect of burden of proof, admissibility, weight, and sufficiency of evidence, and trial, judgment, and review.

Reason for rule.
"If [plaintiff's] action could be given the effect contended for, he could estop himself from using the road while others who were not guilty of the estoppel could insist on its maintenance, and, if all the members of the public should become so estopped, except the constituted road authorities of the county, then it would be possible for the members of the public to close up and abandon a public road contrary to the wishes of those authorities, as well as contrary to the forms prescribed by law."—Mills v. Dawson, supra.

60. Tenn.—Day-Evans Iron Works v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 32 S.W.2d 1038, 161 Tenn. 649.

uity jurisdiction has jurisdiction of an action to enjoin the obstruction of a highway [61]

The bill for an injunction must join all interested parties [62] The joinder as complainants of persons not specially injured by the obstruction is erroneous, but such error is not fatal where the other complainants are entitled to the relief sought [63] Where the bill seeks relief on the ground that the highway was never lawfully closed, it will not be dismissed because an adjoining owner was not made a party [64] Where the obstruction was created by one of two coowners of adjoining property, the other coowner is not a necessary party [65]

In a suit by a township, the state, at the instance of the attorney general, need not be made a party, [66] but defendant cannot litigate the question of the legal boundaries of the highway without impleading all parties in interest, including the county and abutting landowner [67] In order that there may be someone responsible for the costs, a person with a private interest in the public right may be made relator in a suit brought by the attorney general, [68] but the solicitor general is not authorized to act on the information of private citizens where the petition does not allege more than a bare purpresture and does not show a public nuisance [69] The proceedings may be amended on motion by striking out the name of one not a proper party [70]

Pleading The bill for injunction must show that the obstruction complained of is unlawful, [71] and allege all other facts which may be necessary to establish plaintiff's right to the relief sought [72] The fact that the way is an existing public highway must be alleged, [73] but the manner in which it became such need not be stated [74] Where the bill is filed by a private individual it must set forth facts which show that plaintiff has suffered special injury different in kind from that suffered by the general public [75]

An answer founded on prescription must allege actual possession [76] An insufficient answer is demurrable [77] Amendments [78] not inconsistent with the original bill [79] may properly be allowed

Utah —Farr v Wheelwright Constr Co, 163 P. 256, 49 Utah 274.

Thus evidence of dedication of the alleged highway is inadmissible unless pleaded [81] Such evidence is not admissible under a petition alleging a highway formally established under the statute,[82] although it has been held that an allegation that the way obstructed was "a public street or highway duly and legally established" authorizes evidence of a highway by dedication [83] Where the allegations under a videlicet as to the number of feet a fence encroaches on the highway are denied by the answer, complainant can only be required to prove that the fence in some appreciable distance over the road line [84] A defense not pleaded will not be considered [85]

Evidence The burden is on plaintiff to show[86] by a clear preponderance of proof[87] that the road alleged to be obstructed is a legally existing public highway, and that the alleged obstructions are within its right of way [88] Any competent evidence which is relevant to show such facts is admissible [89] So evidence is admissible as to the effect a continuance of the obstruction would have in diminishing the value of plaintiff's land [90]

The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence are applicable in determining whether plaintiff has made out a case entitling him to relief.[91]

Trial, judgment, and review. Depending on whether plaintiff has proved his case, a motion for nonsuit should be granted[92] or denied [93] Where the evidence as to whether the road obstructed is a public highway is conflicting, the issue should be submitted to the jury [94]

Instructions which are sufficient to enable the jury to answer accurately the issues submitted are sufficient,[95] but instructions assuming facts in issue, or presenting issues not raised by the pleadings or which are confused and misleading, are erroneous [96] Where legal terms are used in an instruction, the court should, on request, explain their meaning [97]

As in other civil actions, the judgment must conform to the issues,[98] and to the findings thereon [99] So the rule that a judgment or decree must be definite and certain applies to the description of a highway in a judgment or decree enjoining an obstruction thereon.[1]

The court should issue such an order as is warranted by the circumstances of the case.[2] Where the encroachment complained of consists of growing shrubbery, the decree should allow a sufficient time in which to remove it at a proper season so that it may not be unnecessarily injured.[3] Where it is reasonably apparent that the facts shown require a final result contrary to complainant's theory, a preliminary injunction will be dissolved.[4] Under a preliminary injunction in a suit to remove an obstruction, plaintiff county, where unsuccessful, will not be required to take up road surfacing on the disputed area, and defendant if damaged thereby has a remedy on the injunction bond.[5]

The general rule that appellate courts will not consider objections which were not raised on the trial applies to actions of this nature.[6]

§ 228. —— Action for Damages

a Right of action
b Proceedings
c Damages

a. Right of Action

A county, town or township, road officer, or private individual sustaining special damage may maintain an action for damages against one who obstructs or encroaches upon a road shown to be an existing public highway.

A county[7] or a town or township[8] may maintain an action for damages against one who injures a public highway. The statute sometimes provides, however, that the action shall be brought by particular officers.[9]

The right of action by a township accrues when the injury has been consummated.[10] A township being a political subdivision of the state, and its officers public agents, it cannot, when suing for injury to a highway, be charged with contributory negligence because of the failure of the trustee to exercise reasonable care to prevent such injury.[11]

Private persons. As a general rule, an action for damages for obstructing a highway may be brought by a private person, only if he has sustained special damage differing not merely in degree, but in kind, from that suffered by the community at large,[12] but it is immaterial whether such special damage is direct or only consequential.[13] What constitutes special or particular damage within this rule depends, in large measure, on the facts of each particular case.[14] Generally there is no right of recov-

Special injury warranting recovery

(1) Loss of plaintiff's sheep and shrinkage of others and lost time of employees, due to delay caused by defendant's obstruction of highway—Cottman v Lochner, supra

(2) Where complainants had entered into a contract to improve the road, and, because of the obstruction to the road by reason of its being flooded with water, they were unable to pursue the work.—Brewer v. Misery by one who, in common with the general public, is merely deprived of the use of a highway through defects or obstructions therein [15] So also mere personal inconvenience to a landowner in going to and from his property is not a special injury entitling him to damages,[16] where the obstruction does not come into physical contact with his property or is not on that portion of the road abutting on such property [17]

On the other hand, special injury affording a right of action exists where access to plaintiff's property is cut off [18] It has also been held that a person is specially injured where, because of the obstruction, he is compelled to pursue a circuitous route in reaching his property[19] or in performing a contract [20] Under some statutes a town is liable to all persons who may "in any wise" suffer injury from such defects or obstructions [21]

Existence of public highway As in other proceedings involving obstructions and encroachments, it must appear that the thoroughfare is an existing public highway [22]

b. Proceedings

In actions for damages for the obstruction of a highway, general rules of procedure apply with respect to jurisdiction, venue, parties, pleading, evidence, trial, judgment, review, and costs In addition to the recovery of damages plaintiff may, in a proper case, have judgment for the abatement of the obstruction

Jurisdiction, venue, and parties Actions for damages caused by unlawful obstructions are governed by the ordinary rules as to jurisdiction [23] A statute giving justices of the peace jurisdiction of such actions does not necessarily deprive the circuit court of jurisdiction in like cases [24] It has been held that actions of this nature are local and should be brought in the county where the road lies [25]

Under statutes authorizing an action to be brought by the trustee of an express trust, a township trustee may sue in his official capacity without joining the township with him [26]

Pleading The ordinary rules of pleading govern the sufficiency of the declaration or complaint in an action for damages resulting from the wrongful obstruction of a highway [27] The pleading must show that the road obstructed is a public highway,[28] although the manner in which it came into existence need not be alleged [29] The fact that the highway has been unlawfully obstructed[30] in violation of plaintiff's legal rights[31] must also be alleged, and the highway be described[32] sufficiently to notify defendant of the cause of action [33]

The length and breadth of the obstruction need not be charged,[34] but a complaint which fails to locate it in such a manner as to enable the court to order its abatement, in a case where such an order is sought, is defective [35] Failure to designate the points of obstruction with sufficient particularity is not ground for demurrer but must be taken advantage of by motion to make the pleading more specific [36]

Where the action is brought by a private individual, the special and peculiar damages suffered by him beyond that sustained by the public being the gist of the action, the facts showing such damage must be alleged in the complaint [37]

As in other actions, the pleading and proof must correspond, and a material variance is fatal [38]

Evidence. The burden is on plaintiff to show the existence of a public highway,[39] and that he was injured by the obstruction [40] Any evidence relevant to plaintiff's right of action,[41] and the damages sustained,[42] or to the defense pleaded by defendant,[43] is admissible if otherwise competent under the general rules of evidence in civil actions.

The general rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence apply to actions of this kind [44] The evidence of the highway commissioner should be considered as that of any other witness, and his opinions are not binding [45]

Trial, judgment, and review; costs. As in civil actions generally, questions of fact on conflicting evidence are for the jury;[46] but issues without any evidence to support them should not be submitted to the jury.[47] Whether a person is required by statute to remove an obstruction is a question for the court [48]

The court should instruct on all the issues,[49] and should conform such instructions to the pleadings and the evidence [50] So an instruction which excludes or ignores matters in evidence is erroneous [51]

The verdict should cover all the issues presented by the pleadings.[52] It has been held, however, that, where a paragraph for obstructing a private way is joined with one for obstructing a public highway, a verdict for plaintiff is good, although it fails to specify whether the way is public or private.[53]

In addition to the recovery of damages plaintiff may, in a proper case, have judgment for the abatement of the obstruction,[54] but such relief cannot be given where the complaint and verdict are uncertain with respect to the location of the obstruction [55]

The general rules that objections not raised in the trial court cannot be availed of on appeal,[56] and that a verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed,[57] apply to actions for the obstruction of highways. In such actions the general rules with regard to the allowance of costs are applicable.[58]

c. Damages

The damages recoverable are such as proximately result from the wrong complained of and may consist of the impairment in value of plaintiff's land, or the cost of removal of the obstruction if less than the value of the land, or, in the case of action by a governmental subdivision, of the amount that has been or will be necessarily expended in making repairs. Punitive damages are sometimes allowed for willful obstructions.

In an action against one who has wrongfully obstructed a highway, the damages recoverable are such as proximately result from the wrong complained of[59] and may consist of the difference between the rental[60] or fair market[61] value of plaintiff's land with and without the nuisance. The length of time the obstruction remained may be taken into account.[62] However, if the obstruction may be removed at a trifling cost[63] or at a cost less than the value of the land,[64] the measure of damages is the cost of removal. A person who unlawfully occupies a portion of a public road is not liable for rents or for the value of its use or occupation.[65]

Punitive damages may be allowed for willful obstructions.[66] Some statutes expressly authorize the recovery of double or treble damages in case of a willful obstruction,[67] but recovery of such damages may not be had in the case of an obstruction which is not willful and unlawful but which has been authorized by the public authorities.[68] Where the entire claim is for damages peculiar to plaintiff and no recoverable damages are alleged in the complaint, the existence of nominal or general damages cannot be presumed from the mere wrongful act alleged.[69]

On the question of damages in an action by a private person a road is not to be considered a public way unless actually in condition for use.[70] Where the action is brought by a town or other governmental subdivision, the measure of damages is the amount which has been or will be necessarily expended in making repairs,[71] and if the injury requires the building of a new road in a different location the additional expense of maintaining such road is an element of damages.[72] However, in such

Cost of improving road

Where complainants were under contract to improve highway and they could not get across the flooded part of the road to complete their work on the other side, the true measure of damages was the extra cost of improving the flooded part of the road by the cheapest method practicable, either by building it up or draining it.—Brewer v. § 229. —— Penalties and Actions Therefor

a Liability
b Proceedings

a. Liability

Under statutes in many jurisdictions, a penalty may be imposed, after notice or order to remove, for willful obstruction of, or encroachment on, a legally laid out public highway, or in some instances on a highway by user, but recovery may be denied where the obstruction is slight or does not interfere with travel.

It is frequently provided by statute that a penalty may be imposed, after notice or order to remove, for encroachments and obstructions[74] made willfully,[75] on a public highway[76] legally laid out,[77] but not generally on a highway by user,[78] although under some statutes roads by prescription are held to be included[79]

Such statutes, being penal, must be strictly construed[80] Recovery may be denied where the obstruction is slight[81] or does not interfere with travel[82] Where the statute imposes a penalty on one who injures a road by its unusual use, and fails to repair it after notice, it is not necessary that the road should have been a good road before it was injured.[83] Under a statute imposing a penalty for willfully obstructing a ditch constructed for draining a highway, the fact that the ditch was improperly laid out is no defense,[84] but it may be shown that the acts complained of did not interfere with the drainage[85]

b. Proceedings

(1) In general
(2) Trial, judgment, and review; costs

(1) In General

Actions to recover statutory penalties for the obstruction of highways are generally considered civil, and not criminal, proceedings, and are within the jurisdiction of the courts designated by statute. Such actions must be timely brought, in the name of the state or other governmental agency or private individual given a right of action by the statute, and must be based on proper pleadings and competent and sufficient evidence.

Nature and form. In most jurisdictions actions to recover statutory penalties for the obstruction of highways are civil and not criminal proceedings[86] Such penalty cannot be recovered in an action for an injunction,[87] although under some statutes causes of action to abate an encroachment and to recover a penalty for its maintenance may be united[88] A qui tam information will not lie to recover a penalty under a statute providing that one half the penalty shall go to the informer, to be recovered on warrant, petition, or action[89]

Jurisdiction and limitations The jurisdiction of the court is governed by local law,[90] and in many states it is conferred on justices of the peace,[91] but since issues concerning the title to real property are not generally triable before justices of the peace, a removal of the action to a higher court sometimes becomes necessary if such issue is properly raised,[92] although it has been held that the action is within the justice's jurisdiction, where title is only incidentally involved[93]

Ohio—Burton Tp v. Tuttle, 30 Ohio St. 62.

Where there are repeated violations of the statute whereby separate penalties are incurred, the offense is a continuing one, and a recovery may be had for the penalties incurred within the statutory period before the commencement of the action, although those incurred previous to that period are barred [94] However, where the act for which the penalty is incurred is not in its nature a continuing one, the period of limitation is not extended.[95]

Parties. Where the statute does not provide who shall bring an action for a penalty, it is properly instituted in the name of the state [96] It is frequently provided, however, that the penalty may be recovered by the highway officers of the district,[97] although under such a statute commissioners of highways of two towns cannot join as plaintiffs, even though the highway encroached on is on the dividing line between the towns [98] So, also, the statute may authorize a recovery of the penalty by the trustees of the township,[99] or by any private person who shall sue for the same [1] Where, after notice by a road overseer to remove an obstruction, the road district was consolidated with another district, an action for a penalty was properly brought by the overseer in the name of the latter district [2]

Where several persons are named in an order and notice to remove an encroachment, an action to recover the penalty for failure to do so will lie against them severally as well as jointly,[3] and the fact that they occupied the land opposite the encroachment in common is immaterial [4]

Pleading. The declaration or complaint in an action to recover a penalty for an obstruction or encroachment on a highway must allege facts showing a violation of the statute or ordinance under which the action is brought.[5] Thus it must be alleged that the obstruction or encroachment was willful[6] and that notice to repair the highway was given,[7] where the statute makes willfulness and notice essential elements of the offense It has been held, however, that an allegation that the road officer notified defendant to remove an obstruction and that he failed to do so is tantamount to an allegation that he willfully or knowingly obstructed the road.[8]

The complaint, if otherwise sufficient, is not defective because of a mere clerical error in setting out the section of the statute under which the penalty has accrued [9] Provisos and exceptions in the statute need not be negatived unless they are contained in the enacting clause [10]

Any general description of the highway[11] with a clear statement of the location of the obstruction[12] is sufficient. The description of the highway should be the same as that given in the order to remove,[13] and it must be made to appear that the encroachment complained of is within the limits of the road [14] In some jurisdictions no formal complaint is necessary in an action for a penalty brought before a justice of the peace [15]

The general rules regarding variance between the pleading and proof apply to actions of this kind,[16] and there cannot be recovery where the proof as to the nature[17] or location[18] of the obstruction, or the description of the highway,[19] does not materially conform to the allegations of the declaration or complaint.

Under a plea of estoppel in pais defendant in an action by a town may show that the fence complained of as an obstruction was erected on the boundary line of a resurvey of the highway ordered by the highway commissioners[20] In an action in a justice's court defendant cannot, under a general denial, show that the locus in quo was not a lawful highway, but can controvert only the public user and his obstruction thereof[21]

Evidence The burden is on plaintiff to prove the facts on which he relies to establish his right to recover,[22] such as the existence of a public highway[23] and its obstruction[24] If the statute authorizes an action by an elector of a town, plaintiff must show that he is such elector[25]

The ordinary rules governing the admissibility[26] and the weight and sufficiency[27] of evidence are applicable to actions of this kind Plaintiff must establish his case by a preponderance of the evidence,[28] but proof beyond a reasonable doubt is unnecessary[29]

(2) Trial, Judgment, and Review, Costs

General rules of procedure apply in actions for the recovery of a penalty, as with respect to submission of issues of fact to the jury, the giving of proper and sufficient instructions, the judgment, appellate review, and costs.

As in other actions controverted questions of fact on conflicting evidence are for the jury[30] If there is no evidence fairly tending to prove the guilt of one of defendants, it is error for the court to direct a verdict of guilty[31] Where the statute does not provide who shall fix the amount of the penalty, such question is for the jury[32]

Instructions The general rules which govern the requisites and sufficiency of instructions given or requested in court actions are applicable to actions of this kind[33] Instructions which ignore or exclude issues or evidence,[34] or are based on incompetent evidence,[35] or are misleading[36] or which are not applicable to the issues,[37] are erroneous, and the same is true of instructions which require too high a degree of proof on the part of plaintiff[38] An instruction is erroneous which purports to state the elements of a highway by prescription or user but fails to mention the length of time during which the road must be used,[39] or to state that the public user must be under a claim of right[40]

Judgment Where the action is under a statute which imposes a penalty for the obstruction of a highway only, and not for the continuance of an obstruction, plaintiff cannot have judgment on a verdict which finds defendant guilty of continuing an obstruction[41] The amount of the penalty is estimated in accordance with the statute,[42] and is sometimes required by the statute to be paid into the road fund [43]

Review. Proceedings to recover statutory penalties for the obstruction of, or encroachment on, highways are generally subject to appeal,[44] on compliance with the necessary requirements;[45] but the case must be tried in the appellate court on the issues joined below [46] The general rules of appellate practice that objections not raised in the trial court will not be considered,[47] that defects in instructions cannot be complained of where instructions given at the request of the party complaining contain like errors,[48] and that a verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed,[49] apply to appeals in these proceedings

Costs The right to costs in an action to recover a penalty for obstructing a highway, as in other actions, is dependent on the provisions of statute [50] Where judgment is rendered for defendant, the town is not liable for costs,[51] unless the statute so provides [52] A statute exonerating highway commissioners from the payment of costs, in suits prosecuted by them in their official capacity, applies to actions by such officers to recover penalties for the obstruction of highways [53]

§ 230. —— Criminal Responsibility

Both at common law and under statutes, it is a criminal offense to obstruct or injure a public highway, and generally a prosecution is proper notwithstanding the existence of other civil remedies. Where so provided by statute, a willful intent is a necessary element of the offense, but authorities differ as to whether such an intent is required in the absence of statute.

In most jurisdictions it is a criminal offense to obstruct or injure a public highway,[54] and this is so both at common law, where the obstruction constitutes a public nuisance,[55] and by statute [56]

The fact that mandamus will lie for an obstruction does not bar an indictment [57] Also, statutes providing for a civil action for a penalty and for prosecution by indictment have been held to furnish cumulative remedies [58] It has been held, however, that, when a civil remedy by way of an action for damages,[59] or for a penalty,[60] is provided by statute, there cannot be a prosecution as for a nuisance at common law, although other authorities hold that such prosecution is not barred by the existence of the statutory civil remedy [61]

Intent The general rule of criminal law that a criminal intent is a necessary element of an offense has been held to apply to the crime of obstructing a highway,[62] although a majority of cases hold the intent of the obstructor immaterial in the absence of a statute to the contrary.[63] In some jurisdictions the statutes specifically require that willfulness be proved,[64] and under such a statute there can be no legal conviction where the circumstances negative the existence of a willful intent,[65] as where defendant acted under the advice of an expert surveyor,[66] or under the direction of the highway commissioner.[67]

It has been held that one is not liable under such a statute if he was justifiably ignorant of the existence of the highway, or of its proper location.[68] On the other hand it has been held that a highway is "wilfully" and "knowingly" obstructed if accused does the act intentionally, knowing that it will obstruct or lessen the facilities for travel, although he does not know that the road is a legal highway,[69] and an obstruction maintained in direct disobedience to orders of the road officers is willful within the meaning of the statutes,[70] although defendant believes in good faith that the locus in quo is not a public road.[71] The obstructor is not excused by the fact that he acts under ignorance or mistake of law.[72]

§ 231. —— Prosecution and Punishment

a In general
b Issues, proof, and variance, evidence
c. Trial, review, and punishment

a. In General

The jurisdiction of the offense depends on the local statute. The indictment should properly charge all the elements of the crime and must properly allege the existence and nature of the obstruction and the existence and legality of the highway, but matters of defense or mitigation need not be alleged. In some jurisdictions, although not in others, special defenses must be specially pleaded.

The jurisdiction of the offense depends on local statute,[73] and is commonly given to justices of the peace.[74] If the title to real estate is directly involved the jurisdiction of the justice is ousted,[75] but not where title comes in issue incidentally.[76]

Requisites and sufficiency of indictment generally. The indictment should charge all the elements of the crime,[77] and if framed under a statute it should follow the language thereof, or use equivalent terms in charging the offense.[78] The indictment should be confined to one crime,[79] and be founded on proper affidavit.[80]

That the act complained of was done knowingly and willfully must be alleged if the statute makes that an element of the offense,[81] but where the act itself constitutes an offense, without reference to the intent with which it is done, an allegation of criminal intent is not necessary.[82] Notice to remove the obstruction need not be alleged where the statute does not require such notice as a condition precedent to liability,[83] but if such notice is required, the indictment or information must allege it, and state by whom it was given.[84]

Existence and nature of obstruction. The indictment must charge facts which show the existence[85] and nature[86] of the obstruction, but its particular location need not be alleged,[87] unless a judgment of abatement is sought[88]

Existence and legality of highway. While it must be alleged that the road is a public highway,[89] a general averment to that effect is sufficient without setting forth at length facts to show that it is such;[90] and the state is not required to elect whether it will rely on prescription, user, dedication, or legal establishment to show the existence of the highway[91] In states where highways are divided into different classes or grades, it is generally held to be unnecessary to charge the particular class to which the highway alleged to have been obstructed belongs[92]

The highway must be so described that it may be identified,[93] but it is not necessary to set out the termini of the road,[94] although there is authority to the contrary[95]

Continued maintenance of obstruction Where the continued maintenance of an obstruction, which has been created either by defendant or a third party, is the gist of the offense, facts showing such continuance must be averred in the indictment,[96] especially where a judgment of abatement is sought[97] It has been held, however, that the information need not contain a continuando where the prosecution is not for levying a nuisance sought to be abated.[98]

Matters of defense or mitigation, as that the obstruction was material,[99] or that the road has been laid out by the proper authorities,[1] need not be alleged; nor need the indictment negative the right of defendant to place the obstruction in the highway,[2] unless defendant is authorized by statute to do the act complained of in a certain manner,[3] in which case it must be alleged that the statutory authority has been exceeded[4]

Plea to indictment In some jurisdictions special defenses should be specially pleaded,[5] while in others the statute allows all matters of defense, except that of former jeopardy, to be proved under a plea of "not guilty"[6]

b. Issues, Proof, and Variance; Evidence

In prosecutions for the obstruction of a highway, a material variance between the allegations of the indictment and the proof ordinarily is fatal. The burden is on the prosecution to prove every essential element of the offense charged. General rules of criminal procedure as to the admissibility of and sufficiency of evidence are applicable

Issues, proof, and variance. The rule that a material variance between the allegations of the indictment or information and the proof is fatal applies to prosecutions for the obstruction of highways[7] An indictment for creating an obstruction is not supported by proof of continuing one[8] So material variances between the pleading and the proof as to the location of the obstruction,[9] or its nature,[10] or as to the nature[11] or location[12] of the highway obstructed, are fatal.

If the thoroughfare alleged to have been obstructed is described simply as a "highway," proof of a public road established by any of the recognized methods is sufficient,[13] but where some particular mode of establishment is charged it must be proved as laid.[14] While it is not necessary to set out the termini of the highway, see supra subdivision a of this section, yet where they are set out they must be proved as alleged[15] Where a local description sufficient to identify and fix the precise point of obstruction is given, as well as the termini of the road, the latter may be disregarded, and proof of the existence of a road at the place of obstruction is sufficient[16] The time of the obstruction as set out in the indictment is not material, and a conviction may be sustained by proof of the commission of the offense at any other time within the period of limitations[17]

Evidence. According to the rule applicable in criminal cases generally, the burden is on the prosecution to prove every essential element of the offense charged,[18] and no single fact put in evidence by the prosecution is to be taken as true merely because it is not disputed.[19] The burden is on the prosecution to prove that the road alleged to have been obstructed is an existing public highway[20] either by statutory proceedings,[21] dedication,[22] or user,[23] and that defendant maintained an obstruction thereon[24] Where a specific intent is an element of the offense it must be proved as a fact, and it will not be presumed from the obstruction.[25]

It is incumbent on defendant to prove any defense which he may have to the prosecution,[26] and, where he sets up as a defense an order of the court to change the road, the burden of proving that he conformed to such order is on him, and it is not for the prosecution to prove that he varied from it.[27]

The general rules of criminal procedure as to the admissibility[28] and sufficiency[29] of evidence, including the necessity of establishing defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt,[30] are applicable to prosecutions for the obstruction of highways. A statute providing that in a prosecution for obstructing a road it shall be sufficient to prove that it is used and worked as such does not render such proof conclusive, but merely prima facie, evidence of the existence of the highway[31]

c. Trial, Review, and Punishment

General rules of criminal practice govern the trial of prosecutions for the obstruction of highways, as with respect to the submission to the jury of issues of fact, and the giving of proper and correct instructions, and such general rules also govern with respect to the form and sufficiency of the verdict, and the scope and extent of review. The punishment must accord with that fixed by the statute, and abatement of the obstruction may be required as part of the sentence.

The general rules of criminal practice govern the trial of prosecutions for the obstruction of highways [32] It is the duty of the court to submit to the jury all questions of fact arising on conflicting evidence[33] without expressing any opinion as to its weight, where instructions on the weight of evidence are improper,[34] and give correct and proper[35] instructions on every essential issue presented by the evidence [36]

However, instructions which are not applicable to[37] or ignore[38] evidence or issues should not be given Where willfulness is an essential element of the offense, or where the defense is based on the ground that the obstruction was not willful, it is error for the court to refuse to define the word "willful" if so requested [39] In determining the sufficiency of instructions they must be considered as a whole [40]

Form and requisites of verdict. The rules governing the form and requisites of the verdict in criminal prosecutions generally are, in the main, applicable to prosecutions of this nature [41] A general verdict of guilty is erroneous where the indictment alleges a continuance of the obstruction, but the proof does not show such continuance [42] A special verdict in order to support a judgment of conviction must find all the essential elements of the offense [43]

In some jurisdictions the jury are authorized to assess the amount of the fine;[44] and it has been held that such authority exists even though there is no statutory provision to the effect [45] In other jurisdictions an assessment by the jury has been held unauthorized; but that part of the verdict may be rejected as surplusage [46]

Review In some jurisdictions appeals are allowed in this class of prosecutions,[47] the practice therein being governed by the local law [48] As in other criminal cases a verdict based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed unless manifest error appears,[49] nor can a reversal be had for errors which are not prejudicial to the party complaining [50]

Punishment At common law the obstruction of a highway is punishable by fine and imprisonment,[51] but where the punishment is regulated by express statutory provisions it must accord with such provisions [52] Although the extent of the punishment is left to the discretion of the court or jury within specified limits, it should not be excessive or unreasonable [53]

Judgment of abatement An abatement of the obstruction may be required as a part of the sentence on conviction [54] However, a person cannot be required to abate an obstruction which he, as agent, erected on the land of his principal,[55] although there is apparent authority to the contrary [56] Where a party has a right to erect the obstruction

IX. USE OF HIGHWAY AND LAW OF THE ROAD

§ 232. Power to Control and Regulate Generally

a In general

b Delegation of power

a. In General

The state has the power to control and regulate the public highways and their use

As the highways of the state are public ways, see supra § 1, they are subject to public control.[58] Thus, subject to constitutional restrictions,[59] the state, through its legislature, has primarily the power to control and regulate public highways and the use thereof,[60] subject only to limitations of reason-

Protection against accidents on highways is primarily a state function—Maurer v Boardman, 7 A 2d 466, 336 Pa 17, affirmed Maurer v

The power to regulate the use of public highways extends to their use by nonresidents as well as residents [65]

In exercising such control the legislature may consider the convenience of the majority and the burdens in the construction and maintenance of the highways [66]

Local authorities In the absence of a delegation of power, discussed infra subdivision b of this section, local authorities have no right of control or regulation over the highways of the state,[67] any power of the local authorities to regulate traffic on the highways within their jurisdiction being subordinate to the state legislature and subject to the general laws of the state dealing with such matters,[68] unless the general law expressly makes local regulations paramount [69] Thus, where by statute the power to control and supervise state highways has been vested in a state highway commission, local authorities have no such power over such highways within the confines of the locality [70]

Classification The state has a broad discretion to classify persons and property, in the exercise of its power to regulate the public highways,[71] provided there is a rational basis therefor, an arbitrarily discriminatory regulation being invalid [72] This applies with respect to the privilege of using the highways,[73] and may even extend to the prohibition of the use of the highway for some purposes [74]

b. Delegation of Power

Within constitutional limits the power of the state over the public highways may be delegated to local authorities or conferred on particular agencies

Within constitutional limits, the power of the state to control and regulate the highways and their use may be delegated[75] to local authorities[76] or con-

a. By Public Generally

The public, and each member thereof, has a common and equal right to make reasonable use of the highways for ordinary travel and transportation, such use being the primary purpose for which the highways are established.

The primary or usual and ordinary use which the public has the right to make of the public highways is for passage, or, as it is otherwise said, for travel and transportation,[84] with all the powers and privileges incidental to the exercise of that right,[85] in any reasonable manner, not interfering with the rights of other travelers.[86] However, an unreasonable use is a trespass.[87] Under this right, a person may use the highway for the purpose of leading or driving cattle,[88] and, as stated in Animals § 187 b note 76, if the cattle stray upon adjoining unfenced land the landowner has no right of action for injury if reasonable care has been used by those in charge of the cattle So the highway may be used for moving houses[89] or hauling logs,[90] or even for sports and diversions,[91] although as to the last there is authority to the contrary.[92]

The right of passage includes the right to reasonably safe passage,[93] which may be enforced through the police power.[94]

Except as modified by valid regulation,[95] the right to use the highways for passage extends to any part of the highway[96] and is coextensive with the limits thereof[97]

Incidents distinguished from travel

(1) The right to travel imparts the right of communication from one while a traveler to others, and travel may be by persons congregated in a group, but, while the reasonable incidents of travel are a part of it, the incidents do not themselves create or imply the right to travel—State v Cox, 16 A 2d 508, 91 N H 137, affirmed Cox v State of New Hampshire, 61 S Ct 762, 312 U S 569, 85 L Ed 1049, 133 A L R 1396

pra § 137, the right to make the ordinary, customary, and reasonable use thereof is in the public,[98] there being no such thing as a rightful, private, permanent use of a public highway.[99] It is a right common to all,[1] not confined to citizens, but extending to strangers and foreigners.[2] It exists in each individual of the public equally with the others,[3] and, in the absence of a valid modifying statute or other regulation,[4] pedestrians have the same right as drivers of vehicles,[5] to be exercised with due regard to the rights of each other.[6] A user of a vehicle is not, as a matter of law, entitled to the entire highway from property line to property line.[7]

Methods of travel. The public easement in a highway includes all reasonable modes of travel and transportation not incompatible with the proper use of the highway by others.[8] It is not restricted to transportation of persons and property in movable vehicles.[9] The question of what is a lawful and reasonable use is in the nature of things affected by changes in methods of transportation[10] and the needs of those who must be served by the ways.[11] Thus, when new means of locomotion come into general use, which are not dangerous when properly managed, and which do not interfere with the proper use of the highway in other modes, such new use will not be deemed unlawful in itself.[12]

Stopping, standing, or parking. As an incident of the right to travel on the public highways,[13] travelers may within reason stop temporarily on the highway,[14] but not unreasonably, or to such an extent as to interfere with other travelers or to prevent the free use of the road.[15] The question of how long a traveler may stop or stand on the highway is one of reasonable use[16]

Parking a vehicle within the highway limits has been held not to be a proper viatic use of the highway[17]

Injury to highway. Travelers are not liable for injuries to the highway resulting from its ordinary use.[18] However, there is no absolute right on the part of any person to use the highways in an unreasonable manner which may cause injury to the highway,[19] and statutes exist in some jurisdictions which impose liability on persons using the highways in a prohibited manner causing injury thereto[20] Actions for injuries to highways are considered supra § 228

Care required of motor vehicles with respect to injuring highways is considered in the C.J.S title Motor Vehicles §§ 422, 423, also 42 C.J. p 1073 note 34–p 1074 note 48.

b. Regulation

The right to the use of the highways for ordinary and usual purposes is subject to reasonable regulation within constitutional limits.

While the right of the public to use the highways for ordinary purposes and general traffic has been said to be permissive, a mere privilege,[21] and not an inherent or natural right[22] or a vested right,[23] the right being subject to any proper condition not forbidden by the constitution,[24] it has also been said to be an inherent right,[25] a right which cannot ordinarily be denied to the public or members thereof[26] In any event, the right to the use of the highways is not absolute or unrestricted,[27] but is subject to reasonable regulations by the state through the legislature or other authorized agency,[28] in the interest of and in the furtherance right in so doing to use the ordinary and usual conveyances of the day, and under the existing modes of travel includes the right to drive a horse-drawn carriage or wagon thereon, or to operate an automobile thereon, for the usual and ordinary purposes of life and business" of the public or general good,[29] preserving the highways,[30] and securing the safety and convenience of the public in their use of the highways.[31] While the regulation of the use of the highways is based on a broad power and is a matter of discretion,[32] such regulations must give due regard to inviolable private and constitutional rights.[33] They must be reasonable, not arbitrary or capricious,[34] must operate with equality,[35] and must have some tendency to accomplish the proper end in view.[36] An arbitrary interference with, or unreasonable restriction on, the fundamental rights with respect to the use of the highways is unjustified.[37] Regulations reasonably restricting the use of the highways to normal traffic[38] and prohibiting any exceptional or unusual use thereof[39] are proper, as are such

54. Stopping on "traveled portion"
Under statute providing that no vehicle shall be permitted to remain stationary upon traveled portion of any highway except on the right hand side in the direction in which the vehicle is headed the "traveled portion" of the highway comprises only that portion intended for normal travel and not the shoulders of the road—Nichols v Williams, 16 A 2d 605, 127 Conn 337

Statutes construed
Under statute providing that when vehicle is stopped on highway an unobstructed width of at least twenty feet shall be left and a clear view of stopped vehicle shall be available from distance of two hundred feet the vehicle must turn as far to the right as practical, but must not stop upon any part of traveled highway until at least two hundred feet clear ing of vehicles on the highways.[55]

It has been held that regulations prohibiting one from leaving a vehicle on the main traveled or improved portion of a highway except under specified conditions must be given a reasonable or not too literal construction.[56] Such regulations are not violated if there is a proper excuse or necessity for stopping a vehicle on the highway, and a reasonable effort is made to get it entirely off the traveled portion of the road or as nearly so as circumstances will permit.[57]

Use by federal government While the federal government may use the highways of a state for all purposes necessary or reasonably incidental to the carrying out of the powers delegated to it,[58] and is not to be thwarted or hampered in the execution of such powers by state regulation,[59] the general control of the highways remains in the state and may be exercised by it as far as it may be done without interference with any function of the federal government.[60]

c. Use for Business Purposes

(1) In general
(2) Transportation for hire

(1) In General

There is no absolute right to the use of the highways as a place of business for gain. Such a use may be entirely prohibited, or may be conditioned and regulated.

The general right of the public to use the highways does not carry with it the right to use a highway as a place of business for gain.[61] Such a use is of an extraordinary nature,[62] and differs radically from the right of travel and transportation in the ordinary course of life.[63] It is said to be a privview is available in each direction, save when vehicle is disabled or when on account of obstructions or equivalent conditions ahead, it is impossible to proceed so as to leave the two hundred feet of clear view—Teche Lines v Danforth, Miss, 12 So 2d 784

Parts of highway included

The statutory provision that a street or roadway shall include part of the highway intended for vehicular travel is for the purpose of excluding sidewalks which are generally constructed within the limits of the highway, and does not exclude the shoulder of the highway which may also be used for travel--La Rue v Borrman, 22 N Y S 2d 209, 260 App Div 337, affirmed 33 N E 2d 239, 285 N Y 550

55. Purpose of regulations

The purpose of the statute prohibiting the parking of vehicles except with front and rear right wheels within one foot of right-hand side of improved portion of the road, and correlated sections, is to create uniform rules to be followed by those who use the public highways and contemplates in its major aspect, traveling vehicles as counterdistinguished from nonmoving vehicles or those parked for temporary purposes—Townley v Union Fork & Hoe Co, 22 N E 2d 211, 60 Ohio App 544, appeal dismissed 19 N E 2d 511, 135 Ohio St 96

When "practical"

"Practical" within statute against stopping vehicle on main traveled part of highway when it is "practical" to stop vehicle off such part of the highway is not to be given too literal a construction and does not necessarily mean that which is physically impossible or mechanically practical but rather that which is possible of reasonable performance including the element of reasonable safety under existing circumstances—Locklear v Southeastern Stages, 8 S E 2d 321, 193 S C 309

"Park" and "parked" are defined to mean to stop and keep standing for a time on a public way, or to leave temporarily on a public way or in any open space—Hartwell v Progressive Transp Co, 270 N W 570, 573, 198 Minn 488, quoting Webster New Int D

"Live parking" is keeping a vehicle standing with a driver in his place—Hartwell v Progressive Transp Co, 270 N W 570, 573, 198 Minn 488, quoting Webster New Int D

"Dead parking" is keeping a vehicle standing without a driver—Hartwell v Progressive Transp Co, 270 N W 570, 573, 198 Minn 488, quoting Webster New Int D

Distinctions

The right of a citizen to use the highway for travel and transportation in the ordinary course of life and business is the usual and ordinary right common to all, while the right to use the highway for business and private gain is special, unusual, and extraordinary. As to the former the extent of legislative power is regulation, but as to the lat-ilege rather than an inherent or vested right,[64] subordinate at all times to the ordinary use of the highways by the public.[65]

Vending or peddling merchandise. The vending or peddling of merchandise on the highways is a common and traditional lawful use of the highways[66] recognized by the statutes of some jurisdictions.[67]

Regulation. Within constitutional limits,[68] the state, through the legislature or other governing body, may, generally, entirely prohibit or deny the use of the highways for such purposes,[69] or permit such use to some and deny it to others,[70] or regulate, control, condition, or restrict such use when permitted,[71] as long as the regulation or condition

ter the power is broader, the legislature having the right to wholly deny it, or permit it to some and deny it to others

Wis—State v Railroad Commission of Wisconsin, 220 N W 390, 196 Wis 410

Basis for regulation
State's right to regulate use of public highway is based on nature of business and use of highways in connection therewith—Barney v.

is not arbitrary or capricious,[72] it being the duty of the legislature so to regulate the use of the highways for private gain that such use does not materially impair or destroy the usefulness of the highways for the proper private purposes of all.[73] While this power to regulate the use of the highways for private gain has been said to be a valid exercise of the police power of the state,[74] it has also been said to be broader than with respect to the common right of all to use the highway for travel and transportation.[75]

(2) Transportation for Hire

There is no absolute right to the use of the highways for transportation of persons and property for hire. Such a use may be entirely prohibited, or may be conditioned and regulated

Public vehicular highways are designed primarily for general public transportation and not for conducting thereon the business of transporting persons or property for compensation.[76] The use of the highways by a private or common carrier is an extraordinary one,[77] enjoyed as a mere privilege or license,[78] and revocable at the will of the legislature.[79] The state through the legislature or other authorized agency may wholly prohibit or deny such use to be made of the highways,[80] or it may permit such use to some and deny it to others,[81] provided no unjust discrimination is practiced,[82] no monopoly created,[83] or due process denied,[84] or it may generally permit, limit, condition, and regulate such use.[85]

Effect of federal aid

The fact that the United States contributes to or assists states in building of roads does not deprive state or limit exercise of its police power or other right to control and regulate use of its roads for commercial purposes.—Whitney v. Fife, 109 S.W.2d 832, 270 Ky. 434

Common carriers

U.S.—Buck v. Kuykendall, D.C.Wash., 295 F. 197, reversed on other grounds 45 S.Ct. 324, 267 U.S. 307, 69 L.Ed. 623, 38 A.L.R. 286—Liberty Highway Co. v. Michigan Pub-

The power of regulation with respect to use of the highways by a common carrier has been said to be broader than that with respect to the ordinary use of the highways,[86] and to be derived from a source other than the police power.[87]

Users of the highway for transportation of persons and property for hire may be subjected to special regulations not applicable to those using the highways for public purposes[88] if the regulation bears a relation to highway conservation[89] The state may require suitable protection for the public against injuries through the operations of carriers for hire, whether common or private[90]

While, as has been discussed supra § 232, the legislature may in the exercise of the police power prohibit the use of the highways for some purposes, if based on a reasonable classification, the legislature cannot lawfully make an otherwise proper use of the highway depend on the compulsion of the user unwillingly to assume the role of common carrier and devote his property to public use[91]

d. Grant of Right to Use Highways

No one can acquire a right to a special use of the highways not common to all except by grant of the sovereign power The state has power to grant a franchise for such a use, within constitutional limits.

The primary and preferred use of the highways of the state is for private purposes of the public,[92] and no one can acquire a right to a special or exceptional use of a public highway not common to all the citizens of the state except by grant from the sovereign power.[93]

The power to grant a franchise for a special use of a public highway rests in the state,[94] acting through the legislature,[95] although the power is often delegated to local authorities[96] Where the power to control and supervise state highways has been vested in a state highway commission, local authorities have no power to confer a right of way to a public service corporation over or upon such a highway within the limits of the locality[97] Where, however, the power has been delegated by statute to both state and local officers, reasonable harmony as to their powers should be given within the general scheme.[98] A statute restricting the authority of local authorities in granting franchises for the use of the highways except under specified conditions has been held to refer to cases where the power to grant or withhold a franchise exists[99]

While the duty to serve the public has been said to go hand in hand with the privilege of exercising a special franchise by occupation of the public highways,[1] such duty and privilege are not fully inter-

§ 234. —— Traction Engines and Other Heavy Vehicles or Equipment

The use of the highways by traction engines or other heavy vehicles, or by vehicles of excessive weight, size, length, or load, may be reasonably limited, regulated, or prohibited.

Traction engines or other heavy equipment,[5] such as steam rollers,[6] or a heavy truck and trailer loaded with a gasoline shovel,[7] may be used on highways under proper regulations,[8] such as the requirement of a license,[9] or that the person using such equipment shall repair damages to the highway,[10] or that the engine be accompanied by a flagman to warn travel.[11] The latter regulation is applicable even where horses are going in the same direction as the engine,[12] but not where horses are standing,[13] or to machines not in motion.[14]

The use must be reasonable,[15] and not to the inconvenience of other means of travel or to the damage of the road.[16]

Size, weight, and load of vehicle The weight, size, length, and load of vehicles using the highways may be limited,[17] and the use of the highway by vehicles of excessive weight, size, length, and load may be regulated, limited, or even prohibited, such a use being calculated to result in injury to the highway as well as to those using it.[18] Such regulations must be reasonable and not arbitrary and must be based on the power to exercise police powers for the promotion or protection of the public safety and welfare.[19]

As to vehicles and loads which do not destroy the roads and bridges but yet severely wear them and impose additional burdens of maintenance on them, the state may demand compensation for the special facilities it has provided, in addition to the power of regulating the use of its highways to promote the public safety The amount of the charges and the method of collection are for the legislature to determine, as long as they are reasonable and conform to some fair and practical standard The state may graduate the compensation demanded according to the weight of the vehicle and the load carried[20]

§ 235. —— Bicycles

Bicycles may be used on the highways subject to reasonable regulation

A bicycle is a vehicle which has a right to a reasonable use of the highway equally with other vehicles,[21] subject to legislative or municipal regulation,[22] such as excluding them from bridges to avoid frightening horses,[23] or restricting the rate of speed,[24] or requiring them to be equipped with lights at night[25]

§ 236. Law of Road

a. In general
b. To what roads applicable
c. To whom and to what modes of travel applicable
d. Reliance on observance
e Effect of violation
f. Justification for violation of rule

a. In General

The law of the road consists of rules based on custom governing travel on the public highways, the rules frequently being embodied in statutes or other governmental regulations

In the absence of statute, the law of the road are customs or practices that have become crystallized into an accepted system of rules regulating travel on the highways[26] It relates to the safety of travel, and has been said to be an adjustment of the rights of travelers using a highway at the same time[27] The rules are said to be so generally known that everyone is presumed to know them[28]

The law of the road is recognized in some jurisdictions by statute, many statutes and other governmental regulations having been adopted concerning the use of the highways by travelers thereon[29]

Statutes held valid

(1) Statutes limiting the sizes of vehicles and of loads hauled--State v Ferguson, 125 S W 2d 272, 133 Tex 60

(2) Statute prohibiting transportation of loads over certain weight—People v Linde, 173 N E 361, 341 Ill 269, 72 A L R 997

(4) Statute limiting weight of load, without limiting weight of vehicles —Sproles v Binford, D C Tex, 56 F 2d 189 affirmed 52 S Ct 581, 286 U S 374, 76 L Ed 1167

(5) An act of the legislature, which prohibits the transportation, over a specified plank road, of any load of iron or iron ore of more than two tons' weight, unless it be upon a vehicle with wheels having a tire of at least six inches in width—Seward v Beach, 29 Barb (N Y) 239

Oil wagon

Under statute prohibiting hauling a load of more than two thousand five hundred pounds on a broad-tired wagon over graveled roads when they are thawing, etc, the word "wagon" should be construed so that where an oil wagon had the front and rear wheels held together by side bars between which rested an iron tank bolted permanently to the side bars by iron straps, there being no coupling bolt to the wagon the tank would be construed as a part of the load and not of the wagon—Hamilton v State, 52 N E 419, 420, 22 Ind App 479

b. To What Roads Applicable

The law of the road applies to all public highways, however created.

The law of the road extends to all public highways, however created,[30] and may also be applicable to roads not public highways, if used for travel.[31] However, statutory rules of the road for public highways have been held inapplicable to roads which have not been opened to the public.[32]

The rules of the law of the road have been held applicable only to permanent lines of travel,[33] and under some statutes, only to the traveled portion of the highway.[34]

It has been held that the law does not apply to a speedway in a park, elliptical in shape, used for exercising and racing horses.[35]

c. To Whom and to What Modes of Travel Applicable

The law of the road applies to vehicles of all kinds using the highways.

The law of the road applies to all vehicles,[36] including bicycles,[37] and motor vehicles, as discussed in the CJS title Motor Vehicles §§ 266–273, also 42 CJ p 899 note 15–p 902 note 50. It has also been held applicable to a lawn mower pushed along the highway.[38] On the other hand, the rule has been held not to apply to a building which is being moved along the road,[39] or to a meeting of teams left unattended.[40] Except as the statute may otherwise provide,[41] the rule has been held not to be applicable to a horseman meeting another horseman or vehicle,[42] and not to be strictly applicable as between vehicles and pedestrians,[43] the latter having the right to walk on any part of the road, see infra § 241, and to pass on either side of a vehicle.[44] However, a pedestrian should not compel a vehicle to leave the beaten track.[45]

Common carriers. When a common carrier is authorized to use a public highway for profit it becomes a fellow traveler subject to the rules of the road.[46]

d. Reliance on Observance

All travelers on the public highways have a right to assume that other travelers will observe the law of the road and comply with regulations.

All travelers on the public highways have the right to assume that other travelers will observe the law of the road[47] and comply with regulations prescribed for the protection and safety of others.[48] Thus each traveler has the right to assume that the driver of the other vehicle will obey the law and turn to the right, and to act on such assumption,[49] until it appears, or reasonably should appear, to the contrary,[50] in which case he must exercise due care and take reasonable precautions to avoid a collision.[51] So also a driver of a vehicle having the right of way at a highway intersection may assume that drivers of other vehicles about to enter the highway will obey the law,[52] until the contrary appears or should appear to a reasonable man in his position.[53]

Unjustified failure to observe the law of the road may constitute negligence with resulting liability for injuries proximately caused thereby

It has been held that one who fails to observe the law of the road cannot, in the absence of special circumstances discussed infra subdivision f of this section, escape liability for injury caused thereby to the other, or recover in case he himself is injured,[54] even though he had no time to turn out after discovering the other.[55] The person at fault is liable for injury sustained by the other, even though no actual collision between the vehicles occurs.[56]

In some jurisdictions the fact that one of the meeting travelers is on the wrong side of the road or fails to turn to the right does not show that he was negligent, as a matter of law, and is not conclusive of contributory negligence on his part preventing recovery against the other,[57] although, as stated infra § 246 c (1), it raises a presumption of negligence. In others, if no overruling necessity for noncompliance with the law of the road appears, it is assumed that the one failing to comply was negligent,[58] and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury suffered.[59]

One may not be liable even though he drove to the left,[60] or failed to yield one half of the road, as required by statute,[61] if that was not the proximate cause of the accident. On the other hand, one may recover, although he drove to the left, if his act was not the proximate cause of the injury,[62] and even though defendant was on the wrong side of the road plaintiff cannot recover if he failed to use ordinary care, and the injury was proximately caused by his own negligence.[63]

Persons liable. Although the statute limits the responsibility in damages to the person who is actually guilty of the offense of failing to drive to the right,[64] this does not prevent an action based on the common-law liability against the master of the driver for negligence.[65]

Overtaking and passing vehicle. A violation of a rule of the road requiring a vehicle overtaking another to pass on the right or left of the vehicle in front has been held not to be conclusive evidence of negligence,[66] since, as discussed infra subdivision f of this section, circumstances may justify a passing on the wrong side.

f. Justification for Violation of Rule

Special circumstances or the requirement of due care may justify a violation of a rule of the road

Since rules of the road, even when statutory, are underlaid by the general rules of ordinary care,[67] due care may require one to violate traffic rules if necessary to avoid injury to another who may be violating such rules provided in so doing he does not injure any other who may be traveling where he has a right to be.[68]

Vehicles meeting on highway. Notwithstanding the law of the road, special circumstances may justi-fy, or even require, a vehicle meeting another to turn to the left,[69] as where the right side is obstructed or is otherwise not in proper condition for safe passage,[70] and the roadway is of sufficient width to permit use of the left-hand side without danger to others,[71] although it has been held that the mere roughness of the right side of the road is no excuse for failing to turn out[72] Some authorities have held, however, that, where it is impracticable to turn to the right, a traveler may hold his position, but is not justified in turning to the left in violation of the statute[73]

One compelled to turn to the left in order to avoid a collision, because of another's violation of the law of the road, is not negligent[74] On the contrary, a driver is negligent if he keeps to the right of the road when he could avoid an accident by turning to the left[75] In turning to the left, however, the driver must exercise due care as regards others using the highway in the immediate vicinity[76]

One driving on the wrong side of the road is not justified in crossing to his proper side, if this is already occupied by another vehicle, merely in order to assert the rule of the road,[77] and a driver who is injured by a horse ridden recklessly toward him may be guilty of contributory negligence in crossing over to the proper side of the road[78]

Where a collision would not have occurred had not plaintiff turned to the left, he cannot recover because of his mistaken belief that defendant was not going to turn out[79]

Overtaking and passing vehicle. Special circumstances may justify a vehicle overtaking another to violate the rule as to the side on which the overtaking vehicle must pass.[80]

§ 237. —— Meeting

a Keeping or turning to right generally
b Meeting at crossroads or intersections
c Horseman or light vehicle passing heavier vehicle

a. Keeping or Turning to Right Generally

The law of the road requires vehicles meeting on a highway to turn to the right, the rule frequently being embodied in statutes

While in England[81] the law of the road requires vehicles on meeting to turn to the left, the general rule in the United States is that in such case each shall turn to the right,[82] and there is generally a statutory provision to this effect requiring each vehicle to turn to the right of the other, or to the right of the center line of the highway or of the traveled part thereof[83] A statute providing that the vehicle shall go to the right of the "centre of the road" has been construed to mean the center of the worked part thereof,[84] and the same meaning has been given to the words "center of traveled part" in this connection[85] It has been held that, where the worked part is hidden by snow, and the traveled and beaten path is on one side of the center of the worked part, the center of such beaten path is the line to be regarded[86] So, where the traveled track of a road is to one side of the center, it is not negligence as a matter of law to drive therein even though it be to the left side of the road taken in its entirety.[87]

While, as stated infra § 247, it has been held that the fact that sufficient room was left for others to pass is no defense to a criminal prosecution for failing to comply with the statutory requirement to keep to the right of the center of the road, it is generally held that one need not go to the extreme right of the part of the road which is practicable for travel, but is bound to leave merely sufficient room for the other vehicle[88]

The law of the road does not, however, require a traveler to keep to the right or right of center at all times but applies only to the meeting and passing of traffic,[89] one having the right in the absence of statute or traffic regulations to travel on any part of the road if there are no other travelers having the occasion or desire to pass[90] It has been held, however, that one driving on the wrong side of the road must exercise more care and keep a better lookout than would be necessary on the proper side,[91] and this applies to a person driving cattle along the highway[92]

At night It has been held that, in driving at night, the rule to keep to the right of the road should be strictly adhered to as being the only mode of avoiding an accident[93] It has, on the other hand, also been held that one is not bound to travel on the right side of the road merely because it is dark[94]

What part of a highway one conducting an animal thereon at night should use depends on the circumstances[95]

Pedestrians Statutes in some jurisdictions have modified the usual rule about keeping to the right and require pedestrians to travel on the left side of the highway[96]

b. Meeting at Crossroads or Intersections

Subject to the requirement that due care be exercised at all times, one of two or more travelers approaching a highway intersection on different roads first to reach the intersection has the right of way If they reach the intersection at about the same time, the traveler approaching from the right usually has the right of way

The requirement of turning to the right does not usually apply to travelers approaching each other at right angles at the intersection of two roads,[97] although the contrary is the rule in some jurisdictions[98] The rights of travelers so meeting are correlative,[99] each being required to use due care,[1] and approaching at speed a turn without ability to see up the crossroad is commonly negligence[2]

In the absence of, or subject to, statutory provisions,[3] due care generally requires that the trav-

Favored or nonfavored highways
(1) Under some statutes, right of way privileges on arterial highway are same as on nonfavored streets, except as modified by stop requirement—McCulley v Anderson, 227 N W 321, 119 Neb 105

(2) Under other statutes vehicles on favored roads are given the right of way over vehicles on intersecting highways nonfavored—Maxwell v Kirkpatrick, 116 S W 2d 340, 22 Tenn App 21

(3) Under the statute, a highway was held not to become a favored or preferred highway until signs notifying drivers of vehicles to come to a full stop before entering or crossing have been erected at the highway's intersections with other highways—Maxwell v Kirkpatrick, supra

(4) The fact that a highway connected county seats and was a much-traveled highway did not constitute such highway a "favored highway" within the statute delegating to the highway department and local authorities power to designate, as favored highways, state or main-traveled or through highways—Maxwell v Kirkpatrick, supra

(5) A new road which was not put into service as a part of highway

eler first reaching the crossing be given the opportunity to clear it,[4] and a traveler on a public road has the same right of way over one coming out of a private way.[5] The statutes and other governmental regulations frequently provide that when vehicles approach an intersection at about the same time, the vehicle approaching from the right shall have the right of way.[6] Other regulations give the right of way to vehicles traveling in easterly or westerly directions over those proceeding north and south when they meet at an intersection.[7]

The right of way given to one vehicle over another by regulations or law of the road does not relieve the drivers from the duty to use reasonable care at all times to avoid injury to others.[8]

Turning corner. It has been held that one turning a corner should keep away from the left curb.[9]

Some statutes require a vehicle turning to the left at a highway intersection to keep to the right of the intersection of the centers of the highways.[10]

Effect of traffic signals or lights Where traffic system and was only used locally and more or less permissively was not an "arterial highway," especially where sign on new road warned travelers of crossroad and there was no sign on crossroad calling attention to intersection with new road—Staatz v Tucker, 71 P 2d 401, 191 Wash 404

(6) Under some statutes the right of way at intersection of two arterial highways is determined by county supervisors, by erection of signs—Arends v De Bruyn, 252 N W 249, 217 Iowa 529

(7) In absence of any signs at intersection of county trunk roads, the general statute relating to preference at intersecting points would apply—Rogers v Jefferson, 275 N W 874 224 Iowa 324

(8) However, where signs erected on county trunk roads by county board of supervisors conflict with general statute relating to preference at intersections, such signs govern—Rogers v Jefferson, supra

(9) Regardless of superiority of intersecting roads, stop sign established by authority, is imperative—Shoniker v English, 235 N W 866, 254 Mich 76

(10) Thereunder, traffic on arterial highways has right of way over traffic on local county roads at intersections therewith—Arends v De Bruyn, supra

(11) At intersection of arterial and local county road, traffic on local county road shall stop or proceed cautiously as county supervisors may determine—Arends v De Bruyn, supra

What constitutes intersection

(1) Intersection of two highways within statute giving right of way to vehicle approaching from right when two vehicles approach intersection at approximately the same time means the space common to both highways—Mathis v Bzdula, 188 A 264, 122 Conn 202—Rohde v Nock, 126 A 335, 101 Conn 439—Neuman v Apter, 112 A 350, 95 Conn 695, 21 A L R 970

(2) In determining the space within an "intersection," regard must be had to the course which traffic passing in the various directions through it may normally be expected to take—Beck v Sosnowitz, 7 A 2d 389, 125 Conn 553—Mathis v Bzdula, supra

(3) When the highways run substantially at right angles to each other and their bounds are straight lines, the intersection is the space included within the lines of both extended to cross each other—Mathis v Bzdula, supra—Rohde v Nock supra—Bettilyon v C E Smith & Son, 112 A 649, 96 Conn 16

(4) A charge that edges of paved portion of highway will be considered as limits of intersection wherever such limits are coincident with boundaries of highway, rather than any other part of highway such as the shoulders or grass portions, if any, was a proper reference as to what constituted 'portion of highways intended for normal travel," and, by qualification excluding any part of highways at intersection in question where shoulder or grass abutted, accurately defined limits of intersection's area, where edge of the paved road and of the highway were coincidental—Beck v Sosnowitz, supra.

(5) A charge which defined the "line of an intersection" as a straight line substantially at right angles to the bounds of the highway at a point where, to the reasonable perception of a driver, the highway starts to widen as the result of the outcurving of its bounds to form the junction, was proper—Beck v Sosnowitz, supra

(6) Where highways intersected in general shape of Y but with all of highway bounds curved and with point of intersection enlarged and containing at its center a circular area not open to traffic, beginning of intersection of highway constituting right upper arm of Y with highway constituting base of Y was a line commencing at point on bottom side of circumference of circular area substantially opposite entrance of highway constituting base of Y into intersection and running in a generally downward direction in a curve along right edge of that course which vehicles proceeding up along base of Y to left arm might normally be expected to take until line met highway boundary on right—Mathis v Bzdula, supra

(7) Where two roads intersected in shape of a Y with triangular area in center not open to traffic the triangular area in effect created three separate highways—Beck v Sosnowitz, supra

10. What constitutes

(1) Under statute requiring vehicle at an intersection to keep to the right of the intersection of the centers of the highways when turning to the left, where each of two intersecting highways has parallel sides and so is of uniform width, the point of "intersection of their centers" is the place where the midline of one drawn parallel to its sides crosses the similarly drawn midline of the other—Decker v Roberts, 12 A 2d 541, 126 Conn 478

(2) In the case of a dirt road where there is nothing in the nature of its construction or surface to in-

at an intersection is controlled by traffic signals or lights, travelers must obey such signals or lights, and may assume that others will likewise obey them, but due care under the circumstances must nevertheless be exercised.[11]

c. Horseman or Light Vehicle Passing Heavier Vehicle

Generally horsemen and light vehicles are under a duty to avoid heavier vehicles

It is a customary rule for horsemen[12] to avoid vehicles, and for light vehicles to avoid heavier vehicles.[13] This rule applies to bicycles,[14] but a bicycle need not avoid an ordinary team under a statute providing that light vehicles must give way to heavily laden wagons.[15]

On the other hand it is the duty of heavy vehicles to keep well to one side to allow lighter vehicles to pass, and failure to do so will render the former liable for accidents directly attributable thereto.[16] When it is difficult or unsafe for the heavier vehicle to turn to the right it should stop and wait a reasonable time for the lighter vehicle to pass.[17]

§ 238 —— Overtaking and Passing

Ordinarily in the absence of a statute prescribing the side on which a vehicle overtaking another may pass, the overtaking vehicle may pass on either side of the vehicle overtaken. Due care must be exercised by a vehicle in so passing

If two persons in separate vehicles are traveling in the same direction, neither is compelled to travel behind the other, nor has either the exclusive right to precede the other, and the rear traveler may pass to the front when he can do so with safety.[18] In the absence of any statute to the contrary, the overtaking vehicle may as a rule pass the preceding one on either side.[19] In some jurisdictions, however, the overtaking vehicle is required by statute to pass to the left,[20] and in other jurisdictions to the right,[21] of the one ahead of it. Even in the absence of statute it has been held in some jurisdictions that the law of the road requires an overtaking vehicle to pass on the left.[22]

The overtaking vehicle must use proper caution in passing,[23] and in keeping a safe distance behind when not passing,[24] and the fact that the law requires a driver to pass the preceding vehicle on the left does not relieve him from the duty to watch for vehicles coming from the opposite direction.[25] If, as the result of an attempt to pass, injury results, without fault on the part of the driver of the vehicle in front, the latter may recover if he did not contribute to the injury,[26] and this is the case, although the team in advance was standing still.[27] The question of ordinary care varies with the width of the highway practicable for travel, the season of the year, and other circumstances.[28]

Requirements as to leading vehicle. In some jurisdictions the statute requires the leading team to move to the right so as to allow a following vehicle to pass on the left,[29] although generally the dicate that other than its entire width is open to travel, the edges of the worked road constitute the "bounds of the highway" which are to be regarded in determining what is the "center" of such highway at an intersection, since such edges are significant of the limits of normal course of travel thereon.—Decker v. Roberts, supra.

(3) In the case of a hard-surface road, the edges of the hardened surface constitute the "bounds of the highway" in so far as these are of significance in determining "center" of such highway at an intersection since it is the hardened surface which is intended for travel and the dirt shoulder is for emergency use only.—Decker v. Roberts, supra.

leading team may travel anywhere it pleases,[30] using, however, due care.[31]

A driver is bound to yield way enough for one behind him to pass when it is practicable, and he is requested to do so, and when by keeping his place the one desiring to pass is prevented from so doing.[32] However, he is not bound to turn out where there is room for the following vehicle to pass without way being given,[33] or where it is impracticable to turn out,[34] or no request to pass is made.[35] A driver is not bound either to turn aside or look behind him before stopping,[36] but if he suddenly slows up or stops, knowing that another is so close behind that such action will probably cause injury, and an injury in fact results, he is guilty of contributory negligence.[37]

§ 239. —— Turning Across Road

One desiring to stop at premises on the left side of the road may do so, the rule of keeping to the right not being applicable in such a case However, he must exercise due care in so turning across the road.

The law requiring meeting vehicles to turn to the right does not apply to vehicles crossing from one side of the road to the other,[38] and one desiring to stop at premises on the left side of the road may cross over to that side without violating such law,[39] notwithstanding the statute requires vehicles to turn to the right on stopping.[40] In such case the driver must use due care,[41] if he has reason to believe that another is behind him or at his side,[42] but he need not under all circumstances look behind him or sideways before crossing the street,[43] or necessarily anticipate that a team is behind,[44] or give a signal,[45] and he may recover from another whose carelessness causes a collision.[46]

It has been held that, where a vehicle traveling on the right side of the road meets another traveling on the same side, the latter must turn to the right notwithstanding he desires to keep to the left in order to turn conveniently into premises on the other side.[47]

§ 240. Care Required in Use of Road

a. In general
b Statutory or other governmental regulations

a. In General

Persons using the public highways must exercise due care to avoid injury to others also using them

The rights of persons using a highway for travel are mutual and coordinate, and it is the duty of each so to exercise his right of passage as not to cause injury to another having a like right.[48] To avoid such injury each one is under the obligation of exercising ordinary or reasonable care,[49]

29 C J p 655 note 4
Traveler on highway "is under legal duty to use the care of an ordinarily prudent man to avoid collision with others exercising their law-

even as to one using the highway unlawfully,[50] to anticipate or discover the presence of another on the highway,[51] and not to injure him after his presence becomes known[52]

Although a traveler on a public highway assumes the risks incident to travel in a reasonable and lawful manner,[53] until he learns or should learn to the contrary,[54] he may assume that others also having the use of such highways will observe the law,[55] and he has a right to expect due care to be exercised by others and to rely on this in determining his own manner of using the road[56] In some jurisdictions a traveler properly using a highway is not bound to keep a lookout for others who may violate the law[57] Nevertheless the right to rely on the other's due care must be exercised within reasonable limits;[58] and where two persons are driving on lines that visibly intersect, the general obligation of ordinary care becomes for each a definite duty, and if, as they approach, their contiguity and movements suggest a probable or even possible collision, neither is entitled to act on the assumption that the other will give way[59]

The duty of drivers of vehicles not to drive recklessly but to use due care to prevent injury to others in the highway,[60] and to avoid collisions,[61] extends to bicyclists,[62] and to persons operating motor vehicles, discussed in the C J S title Motor Vehicles §§ 247–249, also 42 C J p 878 note 69–p 884 note 44, traction engines,[63] or steam rollers[64]

ful rights in use of highway"—Berry v Dannelly, 145 So 663, 665, 226 Ala 151

Defined under common law

(1) For "ordinary care," common law with respect to travelers on highways, adopts as its standard such care as persons of common prudence generally exercise—Tomlinson v Clement Bros, 154 A 355, 130 Me 189

(2) One driving on public highway must exercise care of reasonable and prudent man under like circumstances to avoid injuring others—People v McMurchy, 228 N W 723, 249 Mich 147

Police officer in using highway must use same care as reasonably prudent person—Heimer v Salisbury, 142 A 749, 108 Conn 180

Warning of danger

(1) One creating a situation on the highway which becomes a menace to traffic using highway in ordinary and customary manner is held to the strict responsibility of giving proper warning of danger involved—Broussard v Krause & Managan La App, 186 So 384

(2) Duty of one engaged in lawful occupation on highway to onlooker see the C J S title Negligence § 61, also 45 C J p 840 note 73

Lights on vehicles

Failure to display lights on horse-

ed infra § 247, is generally a question for the jury There is no liability for the effects of an unavoidable accident,[66] and plaintiff can recover when,[67] and only when,[68] defendant's wrongful act or negligence is the proximate cause of the injury

Equipment A driver is in general negligent if he fails to have proper equipment,[69] but he is not bound to furnish appliances which will render an accident impossible or to use the highest degree of care to make it safe, but only such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the circumstances[70] The breaking of the harness or vehicle does not necessarily show negligence,[71] nor does it, as stated infra § 426 c (1), raise any presumption of negligence

Leading animals Leading horses in the highway may be done in such a negligent manner as to render the owner liable for accidents[72] It is not negligence per se, however, to drive domestic animals unhaltered on the highway[73]

In the absence of applicable statute or regulation, whether one leading animals along the highway at night should use lights depends on the circumstances[74]

Soundness of horse A driver is not required to have a horse absolutely sound and free from defects, but only to use ordinary care in this respect[75]

Vehicle meeting dog Where one driving at a moderate pace is confronted by a dog, he is not bound to stop or turn aside, but may assume that the dog will get out of the way[76]

Persons liable Responsibility for an accident falls on the person whose negligence caused it,[77] and all persons engaged in it are jointly liable[78] A person is not liable for injuries caused by the negligence of his wife,[79] or son,[80] in the absence of evidence that the wife or son was acting under his direction or with his knowledge or consent A town is ordinarily not liable for the manner of use of a way by travelers[81]

Recovery by owner of property The owner of a horse and vehicle injured on a highway by the negligence of another may recover damages therefor, regardless of the person in charge of the property at the time[82]

Liability for injury to highway is considered supra § 228

b. Statutory or Other Governmental Regulations

Care required in use of highway is sometimes regulated by statute or other governmental regulation

In its exercise of power and control over the public ways, the state through the legislature may enact laws prescribing the standard of care required, and governing the liability, of travelers on the highways, where the purpose to be served is the safety of travelers generally on the roads[83] Under some of these statutes persons using the drawn vehicle is not negligence, in absence of statute requiring lights — Lange v Bedell, 212 N W 351, 203 Iowa 1194

It is the exclusive prerogative of legislative assembly to enact laws prescribing the standard of care required of travelers on public highways and the power cannot be delegated to commissions — Wright v Des Moines Ry Co., 1 N.W.2d 259, 231 Iowa 410.

highways are required to comply with the reasonable directions of traffic officers or with lawful traffic regulations or signals displayed on the highways[84] That a regulation exists dealing with the use of the highways under specified conditions does not do away with the necessity for use of due care under the general rules of negligence, in addition to compliance with the regulation[85]

Effect of violation The authorities are not in accord on the question of the effect of a violation of a traffic statute or regulation as negligence In some jurisdictions such a violation is considered to be merely evidence of negligence and not conclusive on such issue[86] In others, the exercise of ordinary care has been held to require observance of regulations governing the use of the road, a failure to comply therewith constituting negligence per se,[87] and if evidence of such violation is not disputed, it may constitute negligence as a matter of law.[88] Violation of statute or ordinance as constituting negligence generally is considered in the C J S title Negligence § 19, also 45 C J p 714 note 91–p 725 note 67

b Pedestrians crossing highway

a. In General

Pedestrians or other persons on foot using the highways must exercise due care to avoid accidents, while on the other hand, drivers or operators of vehicles must exercise due care not to injure persons on foot using the highways

Although pedestrians have no right of way over vehicles,[89] except as otherwise provided by statute,[90] they may walk on any part of the road,[91]

and, as stated infra subdivision b this section, need not cross at a regular crossing While a pedestrian exercising his right to travel anywhere on a public highway is not guilty of negligence in so doing,[92] he must nevertheless exercise ordinary or reasonable care, in proportion to the danger, to avoid accidents,[93] and, as stated infra § 245, contributory negligence on his part, or on the part of a person working on the highway will bar a recovery, if such negligence is the proximate cause of the injury. However, a laborer is not bound to neglect his occupation in order to avoid injury from the want of ordinary care on the part of drivers of vehicles,[94] and a pedestrian is not, as a matter of law, required to look back for approaching vehicles,[95] or otherwise to be continuously looking and listening for approaching vehicles,[96] although he might be bound so to do in the case of a crowded city street,[97] and the circumstances of his being in the street might render this necessary, as when he alights from a vehicle in front of a moving horse or team[98]

Drivers or operators of vehicles Persons driving or operating vehicles must use ordinary care not to run down a pedestrian walking either along or across a highway,[99] or standing thereon,[1] and the pedestrian has a right, to a certain extent, to rely on the presumption that the driver will exercise such care.[2] So drivers and riders must exercise due care to avoid injury to children,[3] or persons working in the highway[4]

As a general rule one is bound to look where he is going,[5] and is negligent if he suddenly starts his horse without looking[6] However, a driver is not, it seems, under any duty of looking out for persons approaching a vehicle from the rear or the sides thereof, to prevent their falling under the wheels,[7] although he may be liable in case one nearby is injured by the fall of an article from the vehicle;[8] nor is it the driver's duty to keep a lookout behind to see whether persons are riding on the rear of the vehicle[9]

b. Pedestrians Crossing Highway

Both pedestrians and drivers of vehicles crossing a highway must exercise due care as to each other in order to avoid accidents

Neither foot passengers nor vehicles have a prior right of way at a highway crossing They have such right of way in common, in the exercise of which they are bound to use reasonable care[10]

A pedestrian may cross a highway at any point, and is not bound to wait until he reaches a regular crossing,[11] although one so doing should exercise a higher degree of care than when he crosses at a regular crossing,[12] and wherever he crosses he may recover for injuries sustained if he has not been guilty of contributory negligence,[13] as where he is run down and injured by a team recklessly driven by defendant or by one for whom defendant is answerable[14]

A person about to cross a public highway at a dangerous place must use care commensurate with the known danger, and a failure to use such ordinary precaution constitutes negligence[15] The degree of care required at crossings is not the same as at railroad crossings, since the vehicles thereon travel at much less speed than railroad trains and are much more under the immediate control of those in charge[16] Ordinary care under the circumstances is all that is required[17] However, the obligation to exercise care and attention is just as imperative, although the standard is less fixed and exacting, and one who steps into the roadway is bound to remember that horses and vehicles have also a right of way there, and he must give due attention thereto[18] Failure to stop, look, and listen for approaching vehicles before attempting to cross a highway is not necessarily negligence,[19] although it may be ground for a finding of negligence,[20] nor is one negligent in crossing merely because he sees vehicles approaching, provided he has ample time to cross if they are reasonably driven.[21] He may assume that the vehicle will approach at a reasonable speed,[22] or in conformity with laws limiting the speed of vehicles[23] However, as stated infra § 245, he cannot recover if he is injured through a mistaken estimate as to the possibility of avoiding an accident

Driver or operator of vehicle. On arriving at a crossing a driver is bound to notice foot passengers and take reasonable care not to injure them,[24] and the fact that a pedestrian is crossing at a place other than a regular crosswalk does not affect the duty to look out for him[25]

§ 242. —— Reckless Driving or Racing

Driving at an immoderate or excessive rate of speed may constitute negligence.

It has been held that driving or riding at a rapid speed in a highway is not necessarily negligence in fact or in law,[26] although such speed is to be considered in determining the question of negligence[27] In other cases it is said or intimated that an immoderate or excessive rate of speed,[28] especially at night,[29] in itself constitutes negligence, and if the speed is such that the driver is unable properly to control the horse so as to avoid injury to others, a finding of negligence on his part is justified[30] Driving at a speed calculated to frighten other horses of ordinary gentleness on the highway is likewise actionable,[31] and the urgent necessity of one's errand will not excuse careless and reckless driving.[32]

The fact that one was riding or driving at a rate of speed greater than that prescribed by law is not, it is generally held, conclusive of negligence on his part, but is merely evidence thereof, to be considered by the jury,[33] although some authorities have treated this as itself showing negligence.[34]

Racing on highway Racing on the highway has been regarded as a ground of liability for injuries to one resulting therefrom,[35] and when such use of the highway is illegal, both the persons whose teams participated therein are liable, although only one of them may have actually come in contact with the person injured.[36] A statute forbidding racing on a highway has no application to coasting with a double runner.[37]

§ 243. —— Frightening Horses

Damage or injury caused by the negligent frightening of a horse is actionable

A person frightening horses on a highway is not liable for injury resulting therefrom if he has been guilty of no wrong or negligence.[38] An action lies, however, for negligently frightening horses, and so causing damage.[39] If one uses a highway for transportation of extraordinary objects, he is bound to take precautions to warn travelers and to aid them in passing with safety.[40]

Although, where new modes of locomotion come into general use on the highways, effective means must be taken to prevent injury to others by the frightening of horses, the means to be taken depending on the circumstances,[41] persons making use of horses as the means of travel or traffic on the highways have no rights therein superior to those who make use of the ways in other permissible modes.[42] Hence, if a bicyclist,[43] or one operating a steam roller, traction engine, or other like instrumentality on the highway,[44] is not negligent, he is not liable for injuries caused by frightening horses, the mere use of such instrumentalities not constituting negligence per se.[45] However, failure to use due care in operating such appliances will render the operator liable for injuries,[46] if such failure is the proximate cause of the accident.[47]

Persons liable A person other than the one in charge of a team, who does some act calculated to frighten the horses, is liable for resulting injuries to persons on the highway.[48]

liable for frightening a horse.[49]

The bailee, not the bailor, of a bull running at large on the public highway is liable for injuries resulting from the frightening of a horse by such bull.[50]

§ 244. —— Horses Not under Control, and Runaways

a In general
b Character of horse
c Leaving horse unhitched and unattended

a. In General

Injury or damage caused by a runaway horse is not actionable unless the escape of the horse from control is due to negligence proximately causing such injury or damage

The fact that a horse, while being driven or ridden, escapes from control or runs away, and, as a result thereof, causes injuries to persons on the highway, does not render the owner or driver thereof liable, unless there was negligence on his part,[51] and the same rule applies where a horse escapes from private premises.[52] So one is not liable because his horse makes a sudden and unexpected movement which results in injury to another person on the highway.[53]

If the escape of a horse from control is due to the driver's failure to exercise ordinary or reasonable care,[54] and such failure is the proximate cause of an accident,[55] the driver is liable, although as stated infra § 246, it is for the jury to determine the cause of the runaway, and the question of contributory negligence.

Due care must be exercised to keep a vehicle in a roadworthy condition, and, if from want of such care the vehicle breaks, causing the horses to run away, the driver is liable for injuries caused thereby.[56] The use of a spur on a horse while near a pedestrian, causing the horse to kick out and injure him, is ground for the imposition of liability.[57] Liability also arises in case the driver fails to exercise reasonable precautions to stop the horse after it starts to run away.[58] The owner is not relieved from liability by the fact that persons trying to stop the horse caused it to take the direction of the person injured,[59] although, on the other hand, he is not liable merely because the driver by pulling on the lines gives it that direction.[60]

It is commonly not negligent to fail to avoid runaways,[61] or to attempt to stop them,[62] unless the effort is rash and reckless.[63] A person driving on the highway has the right to assume that a team approaching from the rear is in the hands of a competent driver,[64] and, as stated infra § 245, he is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to turn and look.

b. Character of Horse

Greater care to avoid injuries to others using the highway is required of one going on the highway with a wild or unruly horse

It is negligence to go on the highway with a wild or unruly animal not harnessed with reasonable security,[65] or to place the animal in charge of a driver who does not exercise reasonable care to control him.[66] It is not necessary, however, in order to render the owner, or other person responsible for control of the horse, liable for injuries to others, that the horse be of a vicious nature, provided he fails to take proper precautions to prevent accidents.[67] Thus entrusting a horse ordinarily harmless to an incompetent driver, to be driven on the highway, may constitute negligence on the part of the person responsible for the control of the horse for which he may be held liable,[68] even though such driver is not his agent or servant[69]

A greater degree of care is required of one driving a horse having a reputation for running away than is required of the driver of a horse known to be gentle and reliable[70]

While the owner or driver is liable if he knew that the horse was so unruly as to be unfit to use on the public highway,[71] he is bound to exercise only ordinary care and diligence in procuring a suitable horse[72] Knowledge on the part of the owner or driver that a horse is vicious and unmanageable is essential to liability,[73] and in the absence of such knowledge the fact that he has just bought it does not render the owner liable[74] Such unfitness for use is not shown by the fact that the horse once ran away when frightened by the conduct of third persons,[75] nor by the fact that it is balky,[76] or that it has occasionally shied,[77] although such fact in connection with other circumstances may show negligence[78] The mere fact that horses which have previously been gentle and easily controlled show signs of being unruly on being driven does not impose on the driver the obligation to discontinue the drive and refrain from driving the horses home[79]

c. Leaving Horse Unhitched and Unattended

Leaving a horse untied and unattended on the highway may constitute negligence under the circumstances.

Leaving a horse unhitched and unattended on the public highway,[80] especially where the horse is high spirited,[81] or the driver knows the horse is likely to run away,[82] or leaving it improperly hitched,[83] or attended only by one incapable of controlling the horse,[84] has been held to be negligence Such conduct has also been held not to be negligence per se under all circumstances,[85] but only to be prima facie evidence of negligence,[86] which, as stated infra § 246 d (1), is for the consideration of the jury, in view of the character of the horse and the particular circumstances under which it was left

The fact that the act of a third person or some independent agency caused horses when unhitched and unattended to run away does not excuse the person so leaving them, if the accident would not have happened had they been properly fastened[87] There is no liability, however, where the horse was properly fastened and was caused to run away by some agency over which defendant had no control[88]

As stated infra § 246 c (1), a presumption of negligence arises from the unexplained presence on the highway of a runaway horse unattended by any person, and it is not necessary to show that the horse was vicious to the knowledge of the owner[89]

Contributory negligence by one injured on a public highway through the negligence of another will ordinarily bar recovery for such injury if proximately caused thereby

Persons traveling on, or otherwise using, the public highways must exercise reasonable care under the circumstances to avoid injury by other users of the highways.[90] Failure to exercise such care by one injured through the negligence of another constitutes contributory negligence,[91] which, if proximately causing the injury, will bar recovery by him,[92] even though he is a child,[93] or is a passenger in a vehicle driven by another, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence §§ 150–156, 168, also 45 C.J. p. 1016 note 64–p. 1019 note 18, p. 1029 note 15–p. 1036 note 95, and the C.J.S. title Motor Vehicles §§ 486–493, also 42 C.J. p. 1169 note 34–p. 1182 note 57. However, negligence on the part of the person injured, not proximately contributing to the injury, is no defense.[94]

That defendant's negligence is gross does not ordinarily affect the rule,[95] although if such gross negligence consists in willfully running into plaintiff, the latter's contributory negligence will not bar recovery.[96] So there may be a recovery notwithstanding contributory negligence if plaintiff's peril was discovered by defendant, or could by ordinary care have been discovered, in time to avoid the injury.[97]

Acts in emergencies. The mere fact that the injured person made a wrong choice in an emergency caused by defendant's negligence is not contributory negligence.[98]

Persons under disability. A person under disability must use care in proportion to his infirmity,[99] although it is not negligence as a matter of law for a blind person to walk unattended on a public highway.[1] One riding on a highway is under no duty constantly to look back, even though he is deaf.[2]

Violation of regulations or rules of road. It has been held that, if one seeking to recover for injuries suffered on a highway through another's negligence was injured while he himself was violating a statutory rule of the road, he must show that such violation in no way contributed to his injury.[3]

A violation of a statutory rule of the road has been held both to be[4] and not to be[5] contributory negligence per se In any event such a violation is a circumstance from which contributory negligence may be inferred,[6] and if proximately causing the injury will bar recovery [7] On the other hand, even if such a violation is considered contributory negligence per se, it will not bar recovery if it is not a proximate cause of the injury [8]

e Damages

a. In General

In accordance with the rules discussed supra §§ 236–245, a cause of action in damages may lie for injuries caused by an improper or negligent use of the highway Actions for damages to the highway are considered supra § 228 Prosecutions arising out of wrongful use of the highway are considered infra § 247

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases

b Pleading

General rules govern the pleadings in actions for injuries suffered on a public highway

In accordance with general rules, the declaration or complaint in an action for an injury on a highway must show a breach of duty owed by defendant to plaintiff,[9] specifying the negligence relied on[10] and in some jurisdictions the facts stated must either relieve plaintiff of wrongdoing or show defendant's negligence after discovery of plaintiff's peril [11]

A declaration on a statute must set out all the requirements of the statute [12]

A pleading which sets out facts showing wanton and reckless disregard of plaintiff's rights justifies the submission of the question of exemplary damages, although defendant's acts are not characterized as wanton or malicious [13]

Matters of evidence,[14] such as the rate of speed of the vehicle causing the injury,[15] need not be pleaded

A plea of contributory negligence should state the facts constituting such negligence, rather than mere conclusions [16]

Issues, proof, and variance The evidence must substantially conform to and support the pleadings [17]

c. Evidence

(1) Presumption and burden of proof
(2) Admissibility
(3) Weight and sufficiency

(1) Presumption and Burden of Proof

In actions for injuries sustained on a public highway, the injured person seeking to recover generally has the burden of establishing that defendant's negligence proximately caused the injury

In the absence of evidence to the contrary it will be presumed that defendant's use of the highway was lawful [18]

The mere happening of an accident does not raise a presumption of negligence,[19] nor warrant invocation of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur,[20]

20. Mass —Glaser v Schroeder, 168 N E 809, 269 Mass 337
Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur gen-

the burden being on plaintiff to prove that defendant was negligent,[21] and that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.[22]

However, where plaintiff establishes a prima facie case, as where there has been a violation of the law of the road with respect to the side of the road to which travelers meeting on the road must keep,[23] or in a case of the unexplained presence on the highway of a runaway horse unattended by any person,[24] the burden of explanation is on defendant.[25] By statute, in some jurisdictions, a violation of a statutory rule of the road constitutes prima facie evidence of negligence,[26] the effect thereof being to shift the burden of the evidence to the violator to at least counterbalance the prima facie case made out by proof of the violation.[27]

In those states which, in actions for negligence, require plaintiff to negative contributory negligence, the burden is on plaintiff to prove the absence of such negligence,[28] although the rule is otherwise and the burden of proving contributory negligence is on defendant where contributory negligence is considered an affirmative defense.[29]

The burden is on defendant to show that the driver of the vehicle in which he rode was not his agent or servant.[30]

(2) Admissibility

General rules govern the admissibility of evidence in actions for injuries on the public highways

General rules govern the admissibility of evidence in actions for injuries on highways.[31]

The disposition and habits of plaintiff's or defendant's horse may be shown,[32] unless the accident was due to some other cause.[33] The fact that a driver was a careful driver is inadmissible, however.[34]

The general rules of evidence, particularly those applicable to negligence cases, as discussed in the C J S. title Negligence § 234, also 45 C J. p. 1245 note 34–p. 1251 note 90, relative to the admissibility of proof of similar acts or occurrences, govern in actions for injuries on highways.[35] Thus it is not competent to show negligence of defendant by proof of similar acts of negligence at other times.[36] Under certain circumstances, however, other accidents from the same cause may be shown,[37] and where the injury was caused by frightening a horse, it is competent to prove that other horses were frightened by the same object.[38]

As in other civil cases, acts and declarations are admissible if part of the res gestæ.[39]

The law of the road is admissible.[40]

(3) Weight and Sufficiency

General rules govern the weight and sufficiency of the evidence in actions for injuries on the public highways

(1) In general
(2) Questions for jury
(3) Instructions
(4) Verdict and findings

(1) In General

The trial of actions based on negligence generally is considered in the C J S title Negligence §§ 251-305, also 45 C J p 1278 note 2–p 1371 note 14 For a consideration of the trial in actions for injuries from the operation of motor vehicles see the C J S title Motor Vehicles §§ 521–558, also 42 C J p 1239 note 52–p 1287 note 12.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

(2) Questions for Jury

In actions for injuries on the public highways, questions of fact, such as those relating to negligence, contributory negligence, and proximate cause are ordinarily for determination by the jury

In accordance with general rules, questions of fact arising on conflicting evidence in actions for injuries on the public highways are for the determination of the jury,[46] under proper instructions from the court,[47] while questions of law are for the court,[48] as where because of the absence of essential evidence or the presence of undisputed facts but one conclusion can be drawn[49] Thus, except where the evidence is insufficient to go to the jury,[50] or is so clear and undisputed as to make the question one of law for the court,[51] the question of defendant's negligence is ordinarily one of fact for the jury,[52] as is the question of contributory negligence,[53] and the question whether such negligence or contributory negligence is the proximate cause of the injury.[54] In some jurisdictions, when a prima facie case of actionable negligence has been established, but is unopposed by explanatory evidence, the court may direct a verdict against the party guilty of such negligence.[55]

(3) Instructions

Instructions in actions for injuries on the public highways should clearly and correctly state the applicable law, be confined to the issues raised by the pleadings and evidence, and not ignore issues or evidence

In accordance with the rules governing instructions in civil actions generally, as discussed in the C J S title Trial §§ 266–448, also 64 C J p 510 note 1–p 1008 note 15, in actions for injuries on the public highways, the court should give proper instructions as to the general principles of law applicable,[56] as to the rights of the parties,[57] as to negligence[58] and contributory negligence,[59] as to proximate cause,[60] as to the burden of proof,[61] and as to what is pertinent evidence.[62]

The charge should be confined to the evidence,[63] and to the issues raised by the pleadings,[64] and should cover all the circumstances, not ignoring issues or evidence,[65] or setting out only isolated facts,[66] although pertinent questions may be submitted.[67] The province of the jury must not be invaded,[68] nor should the court assume the existence of material facts in dispute,[69] or give undue

55 Statutory violation
Under statute providing that in civil actions a violation of provisions of the Highway Traffic Regulation Act by either party shall be only prima facie evidence of negligence, the prima facie provision is a rule against the violator, and, if evidence of violation stands unopposed by evidence tending to show a reasonable ground for such violation, the trial court should direct a verdict against the violator—Olson v Duluth, M & I R Ry Co, 5 N W 2d 492, 213 Minn 106 prominence to particular matters [70]

Instructions must not be conflicting or confusing,[71] but they must be considered as a whole,[72] and a mistake may generally be cured by an additional charge [73]

(4) Verdict and Findings

The verdict and findings in actions for injuries on the public highways must be consistent and supported by the evidence

In actions for injuries on the public highways, the findings, as well as the verdict and findings, must be consistent[74] and supported by the evidence,[75] and should be reasonably construed [76]

A special verdict in order to support a judgment for plaintiff must find all the facts essential to defendant's liability [77]

e. Damages

Although punitive damages may sometimes be recovered, in general recovery in actions for injuries on the public highways is confined to the damage suffered by the injured party

In general recovery in actions for injuries on the public highways is confined to the damage suffered by the injured party [78] Thus a mere servant having no special property interest in property damaged as a result of another's negligence in the use of the highway cannot recover for the damage to the property [79]

Punitive damages In a proper case punitive damages may be imposed for inflicting an injury through improper use of a highway,[80] but only where the negligence manifests a wanton disregard for the lives or safety of others, or is willful or malicious [81] The owner of a horse which ran away, injuring plaintiff, is not liable for punitive damages, although it was in the habit of running away, and was negligently left by the driver unhitched in the street, the owner not having authorized, approved, or ratified this [82]

§ 247. Penal and Criminal Proceedings

Penalties and criminal liabilities are frequently imposed on persons using the highways in a prohibited manner

In many jurisdictions a misuse of the highway is a misdemeanor,[83] and criminal liability is often imposed by statute for prohibited conduct on the highway,[84] such as racing,[85] reckless driving,[86] appearing on the highway in a drunken or intoxicated

Violation of law of road
Reckless driving may be based entirely on violation of the rules of the road and negligence, although all cases of such violation or of negligence may not be reckless driving—State v Sullivan, 227 N W. 230, 58 N.D. 732.

condition,[87] driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor or narcotic drugs,[88] heavy hauling,[89] driving a specified or other vehicle on a hard-surfaced road, which was likely to damage the road beyond ordinary wear and tear,[90] or willfully driving on a closed highway[91] Unless the statute so provides, a criminal intent need not be shown[92]

Negligently driving on the left side of the road is not a violation of a statute making any "willful" act which seriously injures the property of another, and for which no other punishment is expressly prescribed, a misdemeanor,[93] nor is it a nuisance under a statute making a public nuisance a crime[94]

It has been held that the fact that sufficient room was left for others to pass was no defense to a criminal prosecution for failing to comply with the statutory requirement to keep to the right of the center of the road[95]

Penalties Statutory penalties for not turning to the right are sometimes imposed,[96] although under some statutes willfulness must be shown[97] In some jurisdictions a penal statute is ineffective unless it vests in some person the right to sue for the penalty, and provides for the disposition of the proceeds[98]

Liability at common law If one by driving recklessly in the highway kills another, he is liable for murder or manslaughter as in other cases of acts resulting in death[99] So a person who injures another by intentionally, wantonly, or recklessly driving a vehicle on him may be prosecuted for assault and battery[1]

Indictment, affidavit, or complaint The indictment, affidavit, or complaint should plainly set forth the offense charged,[2] without duplicity,[3] and allege facts bringing defendant within the statute,[4]

§ 249. —— State

The state is not, in the absence of a constitutional or statutory waiver of its immunity from suit, liable for damage resulting from defects or obstructions in its highways, but it may assume such liability and it may modify or withdraw such assumption

The construction and repair of highways is a governmental duty belonging to the state, which can be performed only by agents designated for that purpose, or by municipal corporations on which the performance of such duty is imposed by law,[9] and, in either case, travelers using the highway have no legal right, in the absence of statute, to recover from the state or its officers for injuries caused by defects in the highway [10] Liability must be predicated on an affirmative constitutional or legislative assumption,[11] but it may be assumed,[12] as by con-

Work let to independent contractor
The state may not evade liability for breach of its duty as to a road being constructed under supervision of the state engineer by letting the work to an independent highway

ferring a right of action against the state highway commission for injuries caused by defects in state highways[13] The right of action is wholly constitutional or statutory[14] and in some cases is not based on the law of negligence,[15] but is rather an action for a breach of a statutory duty[16] The liability of the state is limited by the terms of the statute under which it is assumed[17] and by the conditions prescribed,[18] the statutes being subject to strict construction[19]

Since the right to sue the state for injuries or damage resulting from highway defects and obstructions is purely statutory, such right may be withdrawn or modified by the state whenever it sees fit,[20] and such withdrawal or modification may affect pending suits[21] So where a later act supersedes an earlier one and expressly repeals all prior acts or parts thereof inconsistent with the later act, the later act has been held controlling as to suits begun after its passage[22] But where a statute changing the state's liability contains no retroactive language and is clearly so phrased as to apply only to prospective actions, a retroactive effect will not be implied and such a statute will be held inapplicable to cases occurring before its passage[23]

Patrol system A statute providing that the state shall not be liable for damages suffered by any person from defects in state and county highways except such highways as are maintained by the state by the patrol system is an affirmative grant sanctioning causes of action which could not otherwise arise[24] In the absence of a definition in the statute of the term "patrol system," it must be construed as meaning any system adopted by the commissioner of highways under another section of the statute authorizing the commissioner of highways "to adopt such other system as may seem expedient so that each section of such highways shall be under constant observation, and be effectively and economically preserved, maintained and repaired"[25] Under the statute the state is liable for damages suffered by any person from defects in a highway maintained under the patrol system[26] The defects furnishing the cause of action must in some way, as to their causation or continuance, be referable to a fault in administering a patrol system, or system of constant observation, which has actually been inaugurated,[27] and no one can have a cause of action under the statute unless it appears both that his damages are directly attributable to "defects" in the highways named, and that there was negligence in respect of the cause or continuance of such defects[28]

Particular time of year Where the statute so provides, the state assumes liability for damages caused by misfeasance or negligence of its officers or employees without regard to the time of year at which such damages were sustained,[29] but the waiver of immunity from liability may be expressly limited to injuries occurring between specific dates in the year[30]

§ 250. —— Counties, Towns, and Other Political Subdivisions

a In general
b Lack of means or funds

a. In General

A county, town, or other minor political subdivision of the state is not ordinarily, in the absence of statute, regarded as liable for injuries resulting from defects or obstructions in its highways; statutes, however, frequently impose such liability.

In some jurisdictions it is held that municipal corporations proper, such as cities and incorporated villages, are not liable for injuries caused by defects or obstructions in the highway, unless such liability is imposed by statute, while in others a contrary rule obtains, based on the theory that, being invested with the exclusive control of highways within their limits, it is their duty to keep them in a reasonably safe condition These rules are discussed at length in the C J S title Municipal Corporations §§ 782, 783, also 43 C J p 974 note 42–p 979 note 83 It is generally held with reference to quasi municipal corporations or minor political

Facts bringing road under patrol system

Under Highway L § 176 as amended by L 1922 c 371 § 17, limiting recovery of damages against the state for injuries on defective highway between May 1 and November 15 and on such highways as are maintained by the state by the patrol system, the written acceptance of a contract for construction of a highway, and the turning of the road over to the maintenance division for care under its then existing patrol system, marked the road from that time as one so maintained —King v State 194 N Y S 420, 118 Misc 689

Limitation to misfeasance or negligence

(1) A section of the highway law having reference to claims for damages caused by defects in state or county highways, requiring such damages to have been suffered between May 1 and November 15 in order that the state may be liable, is not irreconcilable with the provision of the court of claims act concerning claims for damages for injuries to persons or property by reason of misfeasance or negligence of officers and employees of the state, and if damages are caused by a defect in the highway as distinguished from the negligence of the state officers or employees, the state is not responsible between November 15 and May 1 but if the damages are suffered by reason of the misfeasance or neglect of state officers or employees the state waives its immunity whether such damages are sustained on a highway or otherwise and at any time Miller v State, 244 N Y S 547, 137 Misc 768, affirmed 247 N Y S 899, 231 App Div 863

(2) Failure to give warning of a defect is not a defect —Belair v State, 208 N Y S 470, 212 App Div 206 affirmed 150 N E 551, 241 N Y 552

(3) The presence of a state truck on a highway is not a defect —Minschell v State, 204 N Y S 472, 123 Misc 177

(4) An accident because of failure to give warning or erect barriers on a road being constructed is not the result of highway defects but of negligence —Miller v State, supra.

(5) The state is liable for injury to travelers due to a fall of rock from state-owned mountains on the highway during the thawing period, although prior to May —Shaknis v State, 295 N Y S 663, 251 App Div 767, affirmed Doulin v State, 13 N E 2d 472, 277 N Y 558

(6) There being no finding that superintendent of public works was negligent in the performance of his duty of maintaining highways court of claims would not hold that statute authorizing superintendent to repair any unpaved shoulder outside of pavement maintained by the state, where necessary to protect such pavement was a "waiver" of sovereign immunity, even though read with statute whereby state assumed liability and consented to have liability determined by the same rules of law as applied to actions against individuals and corporations -- Seelye v State, 34 N Y S 2d 205, 178 Misc 278

30. N Y —Karl v State, 7 N Y S 2d 131, 255 App Div 825, reversed on other grounds 18 N E 2d 852 279 N Y 555 motion granted 20 N E 2d 22 280 N Y 571

State is not liable, under a statute imposing liability for injuries from defects in state highways between the 1st of May and the 15th of November for injuries sustained by plaintiff by reason of the existence of a defect in the highway on November 20 —Karl v State, 7 N Y S 2d 131, 255 App Div 825, reversed on other grounds 18 N E 2d 852, 279 N Y 555 motion granted 20 N.E 2d 22, 280 N Y. 574.

subdivisions of the state,[31] such as counties,[32] towns,[33] townships,[34] and road districts,[35] that they are not liable for injuries from defects in highways unless liability is imposed by statute There is, however, some authority to the contrary,[36] and it has been held in some jurisdictions that counties and towns are liable, even in the absence of statute, for defects which they are under an obligation to repair,[37] although all control over the repairs is put into the hands of a contractor[38]

A distinction has been made by some authorities between acts of misfeasance and nonfeasance, it being held that the county or other governmental subdivision is not liable, unless made so by special statute, for injuries caused by its nonfeasance, as failure to repair the highway, although it is liable for direct acts of misfeasance on the part of its officers or employees which create a nuisance in the highway,[39] but this distinction has been denied by other authorities.[40] the decisions on the subject, town,[42] township,[43] or other minor political subdivision of the state[44] may be held liable by one injured through a defect or obstruction in its highways. Where such liability is not regarded as existing at common law, it must rest entirely on constitutional or statutory provisions,[45] beyond which it will not be extended;[46] nor will the scope of the statutes be extended by construction.[47] In the absence of an express imposition of liability, liability will not be imposed on counties or similar political subdivisions by statutes committing to them the construction,[48] the maintenance, or the repair of highways.

Counties to which statute applies

(1) Statute taking away sovereign immunity of county from liability for negligence in failing to maintain public highway is, except as otherwise provided, applicable, when enacted, alike to all counties—Franek v Butler County, 257 N W 235, 127 Neb 852, reversing 254 N W 489, 126 Neb 797

Civil township

Although under Rev Code 1919 §§ 8589, 8590 an organized civil township was liable for defective maintenance of county highways, since L 1919 c 333 a civil township no longer has any power or duty with respect to maintenance of county highway system, and § 29 places such duty on county board, so that a civil township may not be held to respond in damages for injuries from highway defects—Hanigan v Minnehaha County, 201 N W 522, 47 S D 606

New duties not imposed

Under statutes relating to erecting guards and making repairs on highways, culverts, and bridges, legislature did not intend to charge any political subdivision with new and independent duties, but intended to amplify and render explicit the duties assigned by other primary statutes dealing with maintenance and repair and through a waiver of sovereignty to grant a right of action against the named subdivisions for negligence—Waller v Edmunds County, 290 N W 484, 67 S D 165

True municipal corporations distinguished

Cities and villages being true municipal corporations operating under charters, their duties and liabilities respecting sidewalks differ somewhat from those of counties and towns which are mere divisions of state, though made municipal corporations by statute—Gaynor v Town of Hempstead, 275 N Y S 562, 153 Misc 321

Liability based on defect and not negligence

(1) Where suit is brought against a county under a statute imposing liability on it for damage arising from a defective highway the liability of the county is not coextensive with the common-law liability for negligence, and the issue of responsibility turns not on the question of the county's due diligence but on the existence of a defect and its causal connection with the damage—Sell v McPherson Tp, 107 P 2d 670, 152 Kan 731—Arnold v Board of Com'rs of Coffey County, 291 P 762, 131 Kan 343

(2) The basis of the statutory liability of a town under legislation imposing responsibility for defect or insufficiency of a highway rests on the existence of a defect, and the question whether the town exercised reasonable care to keep its roads in a reasonably safe condition is merely the test by which to determine whether the highway was defective—Bacon v Town of Rocky Hill, 11 A 2d 399, 126 Conn 402

(3) Such statutes are designed to cover situations rendering a highway defective, whether the condition falls within the ordinary field of negligence or within that of nuisance where the fault lies in a political body's failure to guard against conditions not created by it—Bacon v. Town of Rocky Hill, supra

(1) Liability for damages for failure to maintain and repair highway arises only where the defendant subdivision is named in statutes, where it is primarily responsible under other statutes for maintenance and repair of highway, and where it is negligent—Waller v Edmunds County, 290 N W 484, 67 S D 165

(2) Under statutes providing that a county board shall be liable in its official capacity for damages received by reason of its negligence in not keeping a road in proper repair, the negligence creating the liability consists in failure to keep the road in proper repair for travel, and to permit recovery it must appear that the road was out of repair and that such condition was caused by defendant's negligence—Sheley v Swing, 29 N E 2d 364, 65 Ohio App 109

(3) A town is not liable for damages to person or property because of defects in highways unless its superintendent of highways was guilty of negligence rendering him liable to town for amount of judgment against latter, and his negligence rendering town liable because of defects in highways is omission, constituting proximate cause of injuries, to use ordinary care in performance of his legal duties—Gaynor v Town of Hempstead, 275 N Y S 562, 153 Misc 321

Liability dependent on nuisance

Long-continued omission to repair or correct a defect in a highway may amount to a nuisance imposing an absolute liability on a subordinate political body for resultant damage—Khoury v Saratoga County, 277 N Y S 3 243 App Div 195, affirmed 196 N E 299, 267 N Y 384

nance and repair,[49] or the general supervision[50] of highways, or by statutes imposing on county officials the duty to remove highway obstructions and punishing them for their knowing failure to do so.[51] However, where the statutes broadly impose on counties liability for injuries arising from their wrongful acts or omissions, and other statutes confer on counties the right and duty to construct and maintain highways, it has been held that the county may be held responsible for damage arising from a defect or obstruction in a highway due to its default[52] The right of action being purely statutory, the legislature may abridge or abolish it,[53] but a clear expression of legislative intention is necessary[54]

Delegation of duties, joint liability A county may not avoid a statutory liability for damages arising from a defect or obstruction in a highway by delegating the upkeep of the highway or a portion thereof to another,[55] and in the case of injuries arising in such a case the county and the person or corporation erecting the obstruction may be held jointly responsible[56] Where a political subdivision is under a statutory duty to maintain a highway, it may not escape liability for failure to do so by reason of the failure of another political agency also charged with the duty to keep the road in repair,[57] or by contracting with a private corporation to execute its duty of maintenance[58]

Defects created by others Whether the liability of the political subdivision is or is not based on an express statute, yet if it has notice of the defect in time to repair it, under principles discussed infra § 263, it is not relieved from liability by the fact that the defect was created by third persons,[59] such as an independent contractor,[60] or by the neglect of a highway officer who is personally liable,[61] or by failure of a railroad company authorized to construct its road over a highway to repair any portion of the highway occupied by it,[62] although it may have a remedy over against the person or corporation primarily liable[63] The fact that defects or obstructions in a highway were created by a railroad company acting under due authorization in constructing its road on or across a highway does not exonerate the political body charged with proper maintenance of the highway from liability for damage resulting from breach of its own duty of care,[64] but the governmental agency will not be held accountable where it has fully met its legal duty in the premises,[65] and where the railroad makes its construction in proper manner, and portions of the construction of which complaint is made are essential to operation of the road, the political body is not liable as for defects or obstructions in the highway even though such authorized portions of the construction may present obstacles to travel or dangers to travelers.[66]

The governmental agency is not liable for defects or obstructions in highways as to which it has no duty of maintenance or repair, as where the road is located within the territorial limits of a different political body, under principles discussed infra § 255 c, nor will it be liable for injuries from defects caused by the elements or by third persons unless in the exercise of due care it could and should have discovered and remedied such defects.[67] A township is not liable for injuries caused by the use of structures on adjoining land, in the absence of any power or duty on its part to enter upon the land and remove or prevent the use of such structures.[68] The fact that a town directs a property owner to improve a sidewalk in a manner not intrinsically dangerous does not render him the agent of the town so as to charge the latter with his negligence.[69] No liability exists for a defect in a district assigned to another town.[70]

Acts of agents A town or similar body must, under statutes imposing liability for defects in its highways, answer in damages to those injured through the negligence of its officials and employees engaged in maintenance of a highway for public travel.[71]

b. Lack of Means or Funds

Lack of funds to make necessary repairs may, under some circumstances, excuse a political body from liability for damages arising from highway defects in cases where it would otherwise be responsible, but not where the duty of maintenance or repair is absolute or where the funds could have been procured

The fact that a political body is without means to make repairs may exempt it from liability for failure to make them,[72] but this rule has been held not to apply where the statute makes the duty to keep the roads in repair absolute,[73] nor will the existence of indebtedness sufficient to consume all the available funds excuse a failure to make a small repair of a pressing nature.[74] So the lack of funds at the time of the accident is no excuse if the defect existed for a long time to the knowledge of the highway commissioner, and he had sufficient funds within that time.[75] There must be not only a lack of funds for the work, but also a lack of ability to procure them[76] or to have the work done in any way, and it has accordingly been held that such lack is no defense if it arose merely from failure to levy proper taxes,[77] or if the abutting property owners may be assessed for the expense,[78] or where the governmental agency has power to call on individuals to make the repairs.[79] A town cannot defend on this ground if it has power to have the expense imposed on the county.[80] The commissioners have discretion to apply the funds in making repairs according to what they consider the comparative urgency of such repairs, and the town is not liable for an error of judgment in this respect,[81] but their discretion must be reasonably exercised, and they cannot, by determining to spend the money otherwise, excuse the failure to make a necessary repair at a trifling expense.[82]

§ 251. —— Highway Officers

According to some authorities, highway officials with funds available for the work are personally liable for damages resulting from their negligent failure to keep highways in proper condition, but other authorities deny liability for mere nonfeasance, as distinguished from misfeasance, unless created by statute. Highway officials may not escape individual liability by instructions to others or by acceptance of the advice of others, but they will not be held for damage resulting from causes beyond their knowledge or duty of knowledge.

In some jurisdictions, highway officers and other officers charged with the duty of keeping highways in repair have been held liable for injuries caused by their negligent failure properly to make repairs, on the ground that such duty is ministerial in its nature,[83] provided they have had sufficient funds in their hands for that purpose or the means of procuring them,[84] and they have been held not liable because, in the exercise of discretion, they have applied all the funds to certain repairs and left others unattended to.[85] This requirement of the sufficiency of funds as a condition of liability, however, does not apply where the injuries are caused by an act of misfeasance on the part of the officer, and not of nonfeasance.[86] In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that, except where the statute so provides, highway officers and the officers of the municipality whose duty it is to look after the roads are not personally liable for injuries arising from defective highways,[87] or for mere nonfeasance or failure to perform an official duty,[88] unless, as is held in some jurisdictions, they are guilty of willful or malicious negligence,[89] liability being denied particularly where the officer is liable to a penalty,[90] such decisions being based on the fact that the particular officer in question was not at liberty to refuse the appointment,[91] or that the duty in respect to repairs is quasi judicial and discretionary rather than ministerial,[92] and is a duty owed to the public generally rather than to individuals.[93] It has been said that statutes imposing on county commissioners the obligation to keep highways in repair cast on them a public duty as a board, such duty inhering in their official status, and do not render them individually liable for breach thereof.[94]

Where highway officials are regarded as individually liable, they may be held liable regardless of the liability of a town,[95] or the fault of an abutting owner,[96] and the fact that highway officials are public employees performing governmental acts does not exempt them from liability for negligent misfeasance.[97] Officials charged with the power and duty to control highways may not relieve themselves of responsibility merely by issuing instructions to a road supervisor,[98] nor are they necessarily excused from liability because they acted on the advice of an engineer.[99] They may be held responsible whether they were in office at the time of the creation of the original defect or only afterward and during a time when they were under a duty to remedy such defect, and the close of their term of office does not terminate their liability so long as their own negligence or default remains the proximate cause of the accident or damage.[1]

The duty of such officials extends to all those with whom the situation brought them into contact, including all travelers whom they should have anticipated might be affected by their conduct.[2] In the absence of knowledge or of facts charging them with knowledge of the defective conditions causing the damage, highway officials are not personally liable therefor,[3] and where they do not participate in performance of work on a highway and they exercise due care in the selection of persons to carry it on, highway officials may not be held responsible in the absence of actual knowledge of negligence.[4] In any event an officer is not liable if he is under no obligation to make repairs.[5]

In some jurisdictions, even where the rule of nonliability for failure to repair obtains, it is held that the officer is liable for injuries occurring during the progress of repairs by positive acts of negligence on his part,[6] or by acts creating a nuisance.[7]

some other person is under a legal liability to remove the obstruction,[12] is no defense However, temporary obstructions of a character not constituting a nuisance are permissible under some circumstances for the benefit or convenience of an individual and will not necessarily constitute ground for liability if damage to another ensues[13] Likewise, an independent contractor for the erection of a building is liable for defects in, or obstructions on, the highway caused by him,[14] as may also be the owner[15] Failure within a reasonable period to clear a highway of dangerous articles or obstructions left thereon by one's self, or reasonably to warn of such a condition, constitutes actionable negligence[16] The mere failure of one person to remove an obstruction placed in the highway by another does not render him liable for injuries caused thereby,[17] but, if he adopts and maintains a nuisance created by another, he will be liable[18] So, where one person's property is made an obstruction by another, the former, if not a party to the wrong, is not liable[19] If the owner permits the property to remain in the road, however, he is liable, although it was placed there by a trespasser[20]

Private corporation Where the duty of maintaining a highway is imposed on, and accepted by, a private corporation, as an incident of its franchise, the corporation may be held liable for damage resulting from breach of its duty to keep the highway in proper repair[21]

Acts under license. A license to make a particular use of the highway, otherwise unlawful, while it exempts the licensee from the liability which would otherwise exist for injuries irrespective of the question of his negligence,[22] does not exempt him from the duty of taking proper precautions to prevent injuries therefrom to persons using the highway,[23] and he is bound, after completing the work, to restore the highway to a condition of reasonable safety,[24] but a lawful act performed on the highway in a lawful manner does not give rise to an action in tort[25]

Defect or obstruction regarded as nuisance The liability of an individual who without authority of law creates a dangerous condition in the highway, to a person injured thereby, is generally based on the theory that the defect or obstruction constitutes a nuisance,[26] and accordingly it has been decided that the liability of such person is not affected by the question whether he was actually negligent,[27] but, where the obstruction, although resulting from negligence, does not constitute a nuisance, the question of contributory negligence is not excluded from consideration[28]

Joint liability Where damage is caused by an obstruction negligently permitted to continue by a county and some person or corporation, the county and such other party may be held jointly liable.

b Highway Contractors

An independent highway contractor is denied the immunity from liability for damages resulting from highway defects and obstructions, which is sometimes granted the sovereign or public body, and, having a primary and nondelegable duty to keep the highway in safe condition during work thereon, a highway contractor must respond in damages for injuries due to his negligence or other breach of duty. Liability is predicated on breach of duty to the public and sounds in tort and not in contract

The presumption is heavily against anyone who sets up the sovereign prerogative as the reason why he should not be held answerable for his own wrongdoing, as in connection with defects and obstructions in highways,[29] and the immunity of a state, county, or the like from liability for damage occasioned by highway defects or obstructions, as discussed supra §§ 249, 250, does not extend to an independent highway contractor,[30] and the latter may not escape responsibility on the plea that he was performing a public work.[31] In other words, where an independent contractor is prosecuting highway work under a contract with the state or any subordinate arm thereof, he is responsible in damages to injured third persons for his negligence just as though he had been engaged in work under contract with a private person.[32] The basis of the contractor's liability is not contractual but in tort.[33]

The primary duty rests on a highway contractor to exercise reasonable care for the safety of the general public while it is traveling over a road on which he is working, as shown infra § 254 a, which duty is nondelegable,[34] and he may be held respon-

Although municipalities are not liable for negligence of their agents in discharge of ministerial duties, such rule does not exonerate an independent road contractor from duty to exercise reasonable care and, where injury arose from contractor's negligence in performance of ministerial and specified duties in connection with work for which it received a valuable consideration, as contradistinguished from errors of judgment in planning by state engineer, the road contractor alone is liable —Boyd, Higgins & Goforth v Mahone, 128 S E 259, 142 Va 690

Breach of duty to public

The liability of a highway contractor for injuries to persons lawfully using the way does not depend on contract but arises out of a legal duty devolving on contractor as well as on the public in general not to obstruct or make the highway dangerous for ordinary use under the circumstances and such duty being to the public generally may be enforced by anyone if damages occur on account of failure to perform that duty —Toler v Hawkins, 105 P 2d 1041, 188 Okl 58

Duty of state to maintain detours

Where both the general state law and the highway contractor's contract imposed on him a duty to use due care in connection with construction work and the safeguarding of the highway, he could not escape liability for damages arising from breach of such duty by pleading a particular provision of the contract casting on the state highway commission the duty of maintaining all detours for strictly through traffic, and was liable for damage suffered on an improperly maintained detour, as he could not shirk his duty and cast it on another —Hughes v Robert G Lassiter & Co, 137 S E 806, 193 N C 651

sible for damage resulting from his negligence or malfeasance in connection with defects and obstructions in the highway,[35] as in the case of his negligence in respect of barriers, railings, and other guards or danger signals, considered infra § 262, the liability of the contractor being enforceable irrespective of whether or not some public agency or other individual may also have been guilty of a dereliction of duty.[36] The contractor will be responsible for damage resulting from defects or obstructions originally caused by him, even though he has assumed no duty to maintain or keep the highway in repair,[37] but an independent contractor may not be held responsible for damages arising from defects or obstructions in a highway where he was guilty of no negligence or other breach of duty.[38] To recover against the highway contractor plaintiff must show both that there was a failure to exercise proper care in performance of some legal duty that the contractor owed plaintiff and that such negligent breach of duty was the proximate cause of the damage.[39]

Completion and acceptance of work The liability of an independent contractor for negligence subsists as long as the road is under his charge,[40] and he is bound to leave the highway in a reasonably safe condition for travel on completion of his work.[41] It has been held, however, that, after completion of the work and its acceptance by the governmental body, the contractor's liability ceases and he may not be held responsible for damage thereafter occurring,[42] since on termination of his control of the road the contractor owes no further duty to the traveling public.[43] Liability of the contractor has been denied where the damage took place after completion and a factual acceptance of the work, but before there had been a formal acceptance.[44]

§ 253. —— Abutting Owners

An abutter may be liable for damage arising from defects or obstructions on a highway where the instrumentality proximately causing the damage was under his control, but not otherwise

Broadly speaking, the liability of an abutting owner for damage to one using the highway adjacent to his premises depends on control of the instrumentality causing the injury.[45] The abutter is under an obligation to use reasonable care to keep

§ 254. Care and Duty as to Condition of Highway Generally

a In general
b Sufficiency and safety of highway

a. In General

The state or subordinate governmental unit on which liability for defects or obstructions in the highways may be imposed is not held to the liability of an insurer but is required only to exercise reasonable care. A similar rule ordinarily extends to private individuals although in some instances they may be liable as insurers. In determining the question of reasonable care such matters as the extent of the highways and the available resources may be factors.

Even in cases where they may be held responsible for damage arising from defects or obstructions in highways, under principles discussed supra §§ 249, 250, the states,[60] counties,[61] towns,[62] or other governmental authorities[63] are not insurers of the safety of their highways or of travelers thereon. This rule applies also with regard to the liability of contractors as to travelers on the highways which they are engaged in constructing or on which they are working.[64] It has, however, been held that one who unlawfully obstructs the use of a highway for his own ends is charged as an insurer against accident of one lawfully traveling on the highway,[65] but the rule does not apply to a case where a contractor is engaged in taking down a building, and there is no excavation or obstruction in the highway by reason of such work.[66]

State or its officers Ordinarily the state is bound only to the use of reasonable care in the construction and maintenance of its highways,[67] and although the case may be one wherein the state has waived its immunity from suit no recovery will be allowed if there was no breach of duty on the part of the state,[68] liability depending on the nature of the alleged defect or obstruction[69] and on whether the highway was reasonably safe for travel under the principles discussed infra subdivision b of this section Under statutes imposing on the state a duty to keep highways and culverts in repair, the duty of the state is to keep them in a reasonably safe condition and it must pay damages for defects arising from breach of its statutory duty, its duty in such respects not being measured by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence in respect of repair, but by the statutory obligation to keep the highway or culvert in good and sufficient repair[70]

Counties, towns, or other political subdivisions The duty of a county, town, or similar subordinate political body is limited to the exercise of reasonable care in respect of its roads,[71] but, where assuming responsibility under principles discussed supra § 250, such bodies must use, and are liable to any one injured by their failure to use, at least ordinary or reasonable diligence[72] at all times,[73] when practicable,[74] to keep the road reasonably safe under reasonably anticipated traffic conditions as discussed infra subdivision b of this section Under some statutes, however, it is no defense that the governmental agency used ordinary care, where, after notice of a defect, the road is not made reasonably safe[75] So, where the statute requires towns to keep their highways safe, their duty is not limited to the expenditure of a reasonable sum on the maintenance thereof[76]

Highway contractors The primary duty rests on an independent contractor to exercise reasonable care for the safety of the general public traveling over a road on which he is working,[77] or to take suitable measures to indicate to the public that a road or portion thereof is closed during construction,[78] and while engaged in improving the highway he is bound to exercise reasonable care in performing the work[79] The liability of a highway contractor is, however, limited to the exercise of reasonable care and diligence[80]

under no obligation to keep the adjacent highway free of defects and obstructions originating from sources other than his own premises,[82] and, as shown supra § 253, his liability for damage sustained on an adjacent highway will in general depend on whether or not he had control of, and responsibility for, the instrumentality causing the damage

One working in or using highway. Anyone undertaking work in a public highway which, unless carefully done, will create conditions dangerous to members of the public using the highway in the ordinary manner is under a duty to use requisite care,[83] and where one engaged in the lawful use of a highway causes an obstruction therein which may endanger others he must use ordinary care to prevent injury to travelers[84]

Factors determining reasonable care It has been held that, in determining whether reasonable care has been taken by the authorities to keep the highway reasonably safe, it is proper to consider the total extent of the highways within the jurisdiction,[85] and the probable expense of doing the particular work under consideration as compared with the resources of the governmental agency to meet such expense[86] A town is not, as a matter of law, free from liability on account of a loose plank in a sidewalk, merely because the town contains a population of only five or six hundred people[87]

b. Sufficiency and Safety of Highway

In general the duty imposed is to construct and maintain a highway which is reasonably safe for public travel of the usual kind, having in view the character and location of the road and the amount and nature of the traffic

Changing conditions of travel

(1) While the general principles covering liability for highway accidents remain the same, changing conditions of travel require precautions and road conditions different from those than heretofore standard and each case on a factual basis of care must be judged in the light of conditions as now prevailing rather than on the basis of old cases decided under the different factual conditions of a former age —Huston v Chenango County, 1 N Y S 2d 252, 253 App Div 56, affirmed 16 N E 2d 301, 278 N Y 646

(2) Although degree of care required of towns in maintaining highways is commensurate with modern traffic conditions, duty is to use merely ordinary care under existing conditions, and negligence can be based only on omitting reasonably to foresee and anticipate danger and to take necessary precautions to avert it —Rigby v Town of Gerry, 204 N Y S 769 209 App Div 391

If the traveled track of a town road is in such a state of repair as to be reasonably safe for travelers, the town has complied with its obligations —Wisniewski v Town of Belmont, 250 N W 859, 213 Wis 34

the use reasonably to be anticipated[90] So, in determining whether a highway is in a reasonable state of repair, its location and character and the extent of travel thereon are to be considered[91]

The duty to keep the highway in a reasonably safe condition means safe for general or ordinary travel,[92] or use for any lawful and proper purpose,[93] including use for both pedestrians[94] and vehicles,[95] such as bicycles[96] and motor vehicles, the duty and liability of highway authorities and others in respect of motor vehicles being discussed in the C J S title Motor Vehicles §§ 168–212, also 42 C J p 833 note 45 p 862 note 71, but a highway which is reasonably safe for ordinary travel is not defective merely because no special provision is made for its use by bicycles[97]

Reciprocal duty of care The duty is to keep a highway safe for a traveler himself exercising ordinary care,[98] and a highway will be deemed safe within the usual requirements if it may be negotiated successfully by all but the most reckless and careless drivers,[99] as there is no obligation so to construct and maintain highways as to insure the safety of reckless drivers,[1] and, as respects travel by horse, it is required merely to keep the highway in a reasonably safe condition for the ordinary horse[2]

Absence of reasonable safety as defect Under principles of law imposing liability for defects in highways, any road not reasonably safe for the reasonable use of the traveling public will be deemed defective,[3] a "defective road" within the meaning of statutes permitting civil actions for recovery of damages for injuries sustained by means of a defective road being defined as one not reasonably safe for travel in view of the purposes for which it is needed and used [4] Conversely, a road claimed to be defective must be not reasonably safe for public travel [5] Omission to supply statutory safeguards on a highway constitutes a defect within the meaning of statutes of this character [6]

Erosion and wear When a highway becomes dangerous through action of the elements and wear from use, a duty rests on the body charged with its maintenance to repair it and put it into a reasonably safe condition [7]

Removal of obstructions In the exercise of ordinary care those charged with the maintenance of highways must remove obstructions and defects which would naturally or probably cause injury to persons having occasion to travel over the road [8] In removing an obstruction placed in the highway by an individual, a town is bound to exercise a higher degree of care than in removing equally dangerous objects which are incident to the nature of the soil or to the construction of the road, since a traveler has reason to expect that the highway will have some natural obstructions [9]

Conditions due to defective plan of construction In some jurisdictions it has been held that a highway authority is not liable for injuries resulting from conditions due to a defective plan of construction,[10] but such exemption cannot be set up by a township on which the statute imposes the duty of keeping the highways reasonably safe for travel,[11] and it has been held that a county's duty to "maintain" a highway may cast on it the obligation to cure defects in the original construction [12] The rule has been asserted that, while the state or its highway commissioner cannot be held liable for error in the adoption of a plan of highway construction, it will be liable for the continued maintenance of the defect after notice thereof [13]

Road under construction Where a highway under construction has not been completed or accepted, the contractor during such period is obligated only to keep the road in reasonably safe condition for travelers vigilant to observe obstructions incident to the construction work in progress [14]

c Existence of duty to maintain

a. In General

If subject to any liability under the rules considered supra §§ 249, 250, an agency charged with the duty of maintaining public roads is liable for injuries received on a regular public highway, however established,[15] from the time it is regularly opened for travel,[16] but it is not liable for injuries received on a road not public[17] or on one designated as a highway without being opened to travel,[18] or dedicated without acceptance,[19] or one abandoned or discontinued,[20] unless the road is apparently still open.[21] The town may deny the existence of the road as a public highway,[22] even though it has repaired it,[23] although in some cases it has been held that a town is estopped by repairs to deny that the road is public.[24] Mere irregularities in the layout cannot be set up.[25] An abutting owner is not liable for injuries occasioned by an obstruction placed thereon received by one using an abandoned highway running through his premises.[26]

b. Particular Portions of Highway and Limitation of Liability to Highway Lines

Liability of the highway authorities does not as a rule extend to defects or obstructions beyond the boundaries of the highways except as they may endanger travelers within such boundaries. The traveled way must be kept safe, as must other portions of the highway, for such use as should reasonably be anticipated.

Under statutes imposing on a highway authority or agency, such as county commissioners, the duty of keeping roads in repair, they are responsible for the condition of the whole road, including a gravel improved strip contiguous to the hard surfaced portion,[27] but ordinarily no liability exists for an injury occurring beyond the highway lines,[28] although the line of the highway is not marked.[29] However, where a condition exists immediately adjoining the highway which constitutes a nuisance and which renders travel on the highway dangerous, it has been held that the duty of supervisors to safeguard the highway requires them to abate such a nuisance under liability for consequent damage if they fail to take the proper steps,[30] and, where the boundary line is not indicated by visible objects and a traveler while keeping within the general course of travel and close to the highway, and within what he believes to be the highway, is injured by a defect outside thereof, the highway authorities will be liable as if the defect existed within the highway,[31] although such rule has not always been applied in the case of sidewalks.[32] A county which uses and repairs a certain space on a road and invites the public to use it will be liable for failure to repair or guard against a defect suddenly created across it, although such defect is outside the limits of the road to which the county holds the legal title.[33] Where defects outside of the highway combine with defects within the highway to cause an accident, liability has been denied.[34]

34. Mass—Richards v Enfield, 13 Gray 344—Rowell v Lowell, 7 Gray 100, 66 Am D 464.

Traveled way The state or other highway body should maintain in a reasonably safe condition for travel that portion of its roadbed which is set aside and maintained so as to invite its use for travel by the public,[35] whether the road is paved or unpaved,[36] and the duty of maintenance and liability for defects extends to unimproved portions of the highway[37] It will also be liable if it suffers the traveled part to be widened or extended by the work of others, or by travel, so as to lead travelers to go on any part within the limits as so widened, and an injury arises from a defect within such limits[38] There may be circumstances under which a highway authority will be liable for injuries occurring outside the traveled way,[39] as where obstructions are so close to that portion of the highway as to be dangerous to travelers thereon[40] Subject to such considerations, however, it may be stated that the duty of the highway authority is fulfilled if it properly maintains the traveled way, and that it is not, as a general rule, liable for defects or obstructions outside of such portion,[41] if it is reasonably straight[42] and wide enough[43] for passing[44]

"Shoulders" The shoulders of a highway are an integral part thereof and should be maintained in a reasonably safe condition,[45] and in the case of highways under the state's control the shoulders may also be regarded as under its control so as to impose liability on it for damage from defects in the shoulder rendering it unsuitable for such use as may reasonably be contemplated for that portion of the highway[46] The shoulders of a highway are not, however, ordinarily regarded as a part of the traveled portion within the contemplation of the law imposing duty of maintenance and liability for damage from defects,[47] and where a highway authority paves and curbs a highway to a reasonable width it thereby clearly designates that as the portion to be used for vehicular traffic, and a macadamized shoulder is obviously not intended for vehicular travel in the same way but for use merely for parking or emergency, so that the highway authority is not liable to one injured by an obstruction while driving along the shoulder of the road[48] Statutes authorizing a state official to repair any unpaved shoulder of a highway outside the pavement maintained by the state where necessary for the protection of such pavement confer on such official a right or privilege and not a mandatory duty,[49] the matter resting in his discretion,[50] and, in the absence of proof that the duty of repair has fallen on the state under exercise of the official's discretion or otherwise under applicable statutes, the state is not liable for damage sustained as a result of a defect in the shoulder[51] Where, however, the state has assumed the duty of construction and maintenance in respect of shoulders, it may be held responsible for damages resulting from defects[52]

Where highway, bituminous shoulder, and subsurface tile drain were

Sidewalks. A sidewalk has been regarded as a part of the highway so as to render highway authorities charged with the duty of maintaining a highway liable for defects in the sidewalk along such highway,[53] and both counties[54] and towns[55] may be held responsible for defects in sidewalks which they are obligated to maintain, although in the absence of a duty of maintenance no such liability will exist,[56] as where, in the absence of statute specifically imposing the duty of care of such sidewalks on towns, a town is held not liable for injuries from a defect in a sidewalk along a highway which has ceased to be a town way and become a county or state road.[57] It is immaterial to the liability of the highway authority that the walk was built by private persons if it is used by the traveling public,[58] if the authority has expended money for its maintenance and repair,[59] and, even where an abutting property owner has constructed a sidewalk without the consent of a town, the town may be liable for defects therein if it has failed in its duty either to remove such sidewalk or render it safe for use.[60] This liability extends to a sidewalk constructed by a township on a turnpike road with the consent of the turnpike company,[61] but a highway authority,[62] such as a state,[63] is not liable for injuries from defective sidewalks the construction and maintenance of which are purely private enterprises, nor is it liable for defects on a part of the sidewalk outside the line of the highway, although such line is not marked.[64]

c. Existence of Duty to Maintain

A highway body can be held liable for damages arising from a defect or obstruction in the highway only where the highway is one as to which it has a duty of maintenance and which is located within its territorial limits

The liability for an injury resulting from a defect or obstruction in the highway, as a general rule, rests on the agency or governmental subdivision which has the duty to maintain and repair such highway,[65] and, conversely, a particular agency or located within state's right of way passing through a village and were constructed by and had been repaired by the state, and terminating the drain underneath the shoulder was bound to result in a dangerous situation, state was liable to pedestrian injured when stepping into hole in shoulder created by defective construction of drain—Wilke v State supra

Statutes imposing liability on a county for damages arising from its failure to repair roads do not create a substantive obligation of repair, but merely impose liability where such an obligation may otherwise exist, and where under other and controlling statutes the obligation to repair a county road within a village rests on the village and not on the county, and where under other and controlling statutes the obligation to repair a county road within a village rests on the village and not on the county, and the county lacks power to repair such a road without consent of the village, there is no liability resting on the county for damages arising from negligence in re-governmental subdivision is not liable where the highway is one as to which it has no such duty[66] or where it is beyond its territorial jurisdiction.[67] Hence a county[68] or township,[69] or other local body,[70] is, as a rule, not liable for the negligent maintenance of a highway which has been taken over by the state, and a township is not liable for a highway which has been taken over by the county.[71] Conversely, the county is liable for an injury because of a defect or obstruction in a township road which it has taken over.[72] However, liability may be imposed on a county with respect to a state highway where the county has contracted to keep such highway in repair[73] although there is author-

spect of repair of the road—Sroka v Green Cab Co, 172 N E 531, 35 Ohio App 438, error dismissed Smith v New York Cent R Co, 170 N E 637, 122 Ohio St 45

Neglect of state officers

Under a statute making a county liable for injuries resulting from defective maintenance of highways and having the effect of allowing recovery for the negligence of county officers in maintaining a highway, and under a later statute transferring to the state the maintenance of county highways, it has been held that the later statute does not repeal the earlier one, but that under a proper construction of both statutory provisions there can be no liability imposed on a county for neglect of state officers in maintaining a county highway taken over for maintenance purposes by the state—Cain v Meade County, 223 N W 734, 54 S D 540

Test of liability

Under statutes imposing liability for damages, resulting from insufficiency or want of repair of any road, on the town wherein the road is located unless such insufficiency or want of repair is on a road adopted as a county road or on a road which the county is by law bound to keep in repair if the county is liable the town is not and if the county is not liable the town is—Stochr v Town of Red Springs 219 N W 98, 195 Wis 399 rehearing 216 N W 487, 195 Wis 399

73 Basis of liability

It may be held either that the county acts in a sovereign capacity with its immunity waived by the statute imposing liability on counties maintaining highways, or that, if there is no immunity because the duty of maintenance arose from contract, then the county may be held liable on common-law principle as an independent contractor--Cain v Meade County, 223 N W 734, 54 S D 540

Duty of state assumed

Where, however under statutory authority, the county contracts with the state to maintain highways, the county assumes not only a contractual obligation to the state, but also a duty to the public and is charged with the same degree of care in maintaining state highways within the county as the state would have been charged with, and under such circumstances the county may be held liable in tort to a member of the public suffering damage as a result of its negligence, whether or not acting in a sovereign capacity—Cain v. Meade County, supra

ity to the contrary[74] If the highway or defective part is under the control of the particular agency it is immaterial that it was constructed by another[75] Where a town in making a road deviates from the true location, it is estopped to deny its liability to maintain the road as constructed[76]

Effect of state aid The fact that the state contributes to the maintenance and repair of highways does not in itself, in the absence of express provision, relieve the local authorities who are aided, such as the county,[77] town,[78] or township,[79] from liability for defects and obstructions[80] Under a statute of this character, it has been held that the test of exemption of a town from liability for the defective condition of a highway is the existence of relief from the duty of maintaining such highway afforded by withdrawal of control from the town, in whole or in part, and local control of the highway, with consequent liability, continues until use of state money for its improvement[81] In other words, state control follows use of state money, and where only part of the road is improved under state money town liability continues as to the portion not so improved[82] Where statutory liability for damage arising from defects or obstructions in highways is imposed on counties and a statutory provision requires counties to maintain the whole of a state highway system lying within the county, the latter may not avoid liability for damage arising from a defect or obstruction in such a highway by the plea that the state and federal governments furnished the money for the construction work being done at the time of the accident[83]

Roads under construction Where the state undertakes construction of a highway within a town or village, and the work is done by a highway contractor under contract with the state, the town or village is not liable for injuries sustained during the period of construction[84]

§ 256 —— Roads under Repair

Those in control of, or charged with, maintenance of a highway under repair are charged with the duty of making adequate provision for the safety of the traveling public, but they are not held to an insurer's liability nor liable for damage sustained without fault attributable to them.

Those charged with the maintenance of highways are under a duty to safeguard the traveling public while a highway is undergoing repair,[86] and anyone making repairs or engaged in extraordinary use of a highway is under a duty to observe proper precautions,[87] as by the erection of suitable barriers or warning devices, under principles discussed infra § 262. A county charged with the maintenance of highways may not evade its responsibility to keep them reasonably safe while undergoing repairs by delegation of the work to another.[88] Those in control of roads under repair are not charged with an insurer's liability, and where they have exercised reasonable care to safeguard the traveling public so far as circumstances require or permit, they are absolved from liability for damage sustained.[89] Reasonable obstructions for repair work are not defects on which liability can be predicated,[90] nor will defects in a temporary road cause liability.[91]

§ 257. Defects and Obstructions Causing Injury

An actionable defect or obstruction in a highway is in general any condition of the highway or object in, upon, or near the traveled path, which would necessarily obstruct or hinder one in the use of the road for traveling, or which from its nature and position would be likely to produce that result by impeding, embarrassing, or opposing passage along the road

A defect or obstruction in a roadway subjecting the state, municipality, board, or officer to liability is in general any condition of the highway or object in, upon, or near the traveled path, which would necessarily obstruct or hinder one in the use of the road for the purpose of traveling, or which from its nature and position would be likely to produce that result by impeding, embarrassing, or opposing passage along the road,[92] anything in the state or condition of the highway which renders it unsafe or inconvenient for ordinary travel.[93] Such defect or obstruction may consist of the omission of a statutory duty imposed for the purpose of making the highway safer,[94] a slippery condition of the highway, caused by the application of oil,[95]

"Defect" in highway

(1) To come within statute imposing liability against state for damages 'defect' must be condition which affects highway as means of transit.—Payne v. State Highway Commission, 16 P.2d 509, 136 Kan. 561.—29 C.J. p. 685, note 41 [b].

(2) Under statute wherein the state assumes liability for defects in highways maintained by it, it must be assumed that 'defect" was intended to be given the same interpretation as had been given to it in holding towns liable for defects in highways.—Woll v. State, 202 N.Y.S. 754, 122 Misc. 381.

Other than defects in surface

The defects may consist of other than mere defects in the surface of the highway.—Wood v. State, 202 N.Y.S. 340, 122 Misc. 860.

Duty imposed by new statute

Where a statute is enacted making counties liable for injuries caused by defective highways and thereafter the legislature passes a new statute imposing additional duties on counties in respect of highways, for the purpose of making highways safer, omission of a county to perform such new duty creates a defect within the meaning of the earlier statute for which the county may be held to respond in damages for resultant injuries.—Story v. Board of Com'rs of Brown County, 226 P. 772, 116 Kan. 300.

An oil company maintaining gasoline manufacturing plant near highway must exercise reasonable care to prevent injury to travelers on highway as result of manner in which company utilizes its equipment and plant and can be held responsible for damage resulting from slippery condition of highway caused by water blowing from company's

Liability has been imposed for injuries resulting from projections across the highway,[6] objects falling upon the road[7] except where liability is predicated on peculiar local statutes not covering such cases,[8] structures in the highway,[9] poles or posts,[10] trees,[11] fences,[12] bridges over ditches or excavations,[13] piles of material,[14] or other objects upon the roadway.[15]

way duly located,[17] or windings and divergences from the normal roadway, made by the town officers after a heavy snowfall.[18] There is no liability for injuries caused by objects while being moved by human direction, and which are neither fixed to nor stationary in one position within the highway;[19] and accordingly the municipality has been held free from liability for injuries by sleds on which persons were coasting,[20] or for injuries to one struck by a locomotive on a railroad track illegally laid on the highway,[21] although it has been held that, where an employee of a county causes a motor truck to strike another vehicle, the county is liable under a statute imposing liability for defects in highways.[22]

A municipality, or person causing the defect, generally is not liable for a latent defect in the road,[23] unless the defect should have been known of and repaired,[24] or for obstructions casually placed there,[25] or for extraordinary conditions or events,[26] or for mere accidents.[27] An object or structure upon abutting property which results in injuries to one on the highway is not, it has been decided, an insufficiency or want of repair of the highway within a statute rendering the municipality liable for injuries caused thereby,[28] and, even apart from statute, a structure so erected for a legitimate business purpose has been held not to be ground of liability to one injured thereby, the municipality having no power to remove it.[29] The mere fact that a highway is under construction is not a defect on which liability for injuries can be predicated.[30]

Overhanging or falling branches or trees At common law a municipality is not liable for injuries caused by decayed limbs or trees falling across the highway,[31] and it has been held that a statute requiring municipalities to keep the public highways in safe condition applies only to the surface of the passageway, and does not extend to falling trees or branches.[32] Under other statutes, however, a municipality, or the highway officers, having due knowledge of the defect, may be held liable for injuries caused by the branches of trees overhanging the highway,[33] or by defective limbs or trees falling on the highway,[34] even though the tree stood beyond the limits of the highway.[35] An abutting owner generally cannot be held liable for defective trees growing within the limits of the highway,[36]

§ 258. —— Defects Caused by Elements; Snow and Ice

Defects or dangerous conditions of a highway arising from the action of the elements, such as ice and snow, generally are actionable only where they exist because of some fault or act of negligence of the state, municipality, or highway board, or of an abutting owner.

The state, municipality, or highway board responsible for the condition of the highway, if otherwise liable, as discussed supra §§ 249–251, will be liable, although the defect is caused, or the danger from a defect is increased, by the elements, if it knew or should have known of the condition[38] It will be liable where a way is defective from the presence upon it of snow and ice in large quantities, negligently permitted to remain by the municipal authorities[39] after the lapse of sufficient time to clear the way,[40] and for injuries caused by ice which would not have formed but for a structural defect in the highway preventing water thereon from flowing off[41] Liability for negligently permitting snow or ice to remain on the highway is unaffected by the fact that the snow was piled up by a snow plow[42] or that objects placed on the road by individuals caused a snowdrift,[43] but it has been held that town officers are excused from taking action by the existence of a custom among the inhabitants of the town to join and break paths through the snow[44]

However, as in other cases, the state, municipality, or board is bound merely to exercise reasonable care to render the highway safe,[45] and is not liable for dangerous highway conditions which are due solely to the weather,[46] such as a swampy and miry condition of the road resulting entirely from the weather and the nature of the soil,[47] or a slippery condition due to a thaw softening the surface[48] A municipality ordinarily is not liable for injuries resulting from mere slipperiness from ice on a properly constructed highway or sidewalk,[49] nor is it bound to take precautions against an extraordinary flood or storm[50] Under the provisions land is a duly established county road, to safeguard the traveler thereon against dangers from defects in trees growing within the limits of the road, and where the town board anticipating the grading of a roadway on a right of way over the defendant's land gave him notice to remove trees on such right of way, such order did not place him under legal duty to do so, or render him liable for injury to travelers from the falling trees—Zacharias v Nesbitt supra

of some statutes, no actionable defect exists unless something besides the snow and ice contributed to cause it [51]

Abutting owner An owner or occupant of property abutting on a sidewalk along a public highway may be held liable at common law for injuries caused by his wrongful act in accumulating snow or ice on the sidewalk However, he is not liable, in the absence of statute, for injuries caused by the natural accumulation of snow or ice on the sidewalk, although the hazardous condition is created by his lawful use of the sidewalk, as such an accumulation does not prevent his use of the sidewalk as a means of access to his property, and does not require him to guard against accident by sprinkling ashes or taking other like precautions for the protection of the public [52]

§ 259. —— Objects Frightening Horses

Objects improperly and negligently placed or allowed to remain in or near the highway which are calculated to frighten horses generally constitute defects in the highway and render the highway authority, or person causing the defect, liable for injuries caused thereby

In some states it is held that highway authorities are not liable for an injury caused by the presence in the highway of an object frightening a horse, if the horse or vehicle does not actually come in contact with such object and it is not an obstruction to travel,[53] although there may be liability where the injury is caused by the horse shying at one defect and the vehicle hitting that or some other defect [54] As a general rule, however, objects improperly and negligently allowed to remain in or near the highway which are calculated to frighten horses constitute defects in the highway and impose liability for injuries caused thereby.[55] The liability is in some states limited to cases in which the object is within the traveled part of the highway,[56] and in others this is as far as the actual decisions go,[57] but generally the fact that the object is in the untraveled rather than the traveled part does not relieve the highway authorities from liability [58] To render them liable, however, it must appear that the object was one naturally calculated to frighten horses of ordinary gentleness and that the horse frightened was of such a character.[59] A town has been held not liable for injuries caused by a horse taking fright at a moving train,[60] at the noise of blasting by a highway officer engaged in repairing the road,[61] at a noise made by the falling on a trestle over the road of a rope used in drawing mining cars,[62] or at water flowing over the highway[63] unless the town has caused such overflowing [64]

Liability of individual An individual who wrongfully places or permits to remain in the highway objects calculated to frighten horses is liable for injuries resulting from a horse taking fright,[65] although he owns the fee in the highway,[66] if such use of the highway involves an unreasonable interference with the rights of the public,[67] and if the object is a nuisance per se it is immaterial how long it has been permitted to remain [68] Such liability, however, does not attach if the object is lawfully on the highway and does not unreasonably interfere with traffic,[69] and it may be lawfully al-

§ 260. Precautions

Reasonable precaution must be exercised to prevent travelers using an abandoned or temporary road.

The municipality must use reasonable precaution to prevent travelers from passing over an abandoned[71] or temporary[72] path or road

§ 261. —— Lighting Highway

Failure to light a highway generally is not actionable

Failure to light a highway is not actionable,[73] except at dangerous places, as discussed infra § 262

§ 262. —— Barriers, Railings, and Other Guards or Danger Signals

Neglect to place proper barriers, railings, and other guards or danger signals at obstructions and dangerous places in a highway, when necessary for the safety of travelers, is actionable, as against the state, governmental body, or individual responsible therefor

The duty of maintaining a highway in a safe condition, as discussed supra § 254, includes the duty of providing proper safeguards or giving adequate warning of dangerous conditions in the highway,[74] and this duty is applicable to pedestrians as well as to travelers in vehicles [75] Accordingly, subject to the rules discussed supra §§ 248-253 relating to the liability of persons and governmental bodies for injuries from defects or obstructions in the highway, the state[76] or governmental body or officer charged with the maintenance of the highway is liable for neglect to guard, place lights around, or otherwise give warning of, obstructions and dangerous points in a highway,[77] or for neglect to fur-

the accident must, in order to be actionable, have been such that the presence of the guard or signal would have prevented its occurrence.[85] There is no duty to fence a road or to provide barriers merely to prevent travelers from straying off the highway.[86] The necessity of a barrier depends on the circumstances of the particular case,[87] and in determining such necessity the proximity of the danger with reference to the highway as traveled,[88] the width and general character of the road,[89] the location of the road, whether in a thinly settled or a well populated portion of the state,[90] the amount and character of travel,[91] and the presence of other objects serving as guards[92] may be considered, as may be the presence of some object or agent liable to frighten a horse.[93] Where the condition of a highway is such as in itself to give notice that the way is not open to public travel, it is not necessary to place barriers there.[94]

Ordinary care is the measure of duty required in guarding, or warning of, dangerous places,[95] it is not necessary to guard against rare and un-

In determining duty of county with respect to warnings or barriers along county highway, each case must be judged by itself and in light of prevailing conditions, rather than on basis of conditions which obtained when previous decisions were made.—Huston v. Between highway and sidewalk.

Where line of demarcation between highway and sidewalk erected by individuals for private purposes was clearly defined by different elevation the sidewalk being some five or six inches higher than roadway, and it could not be said that break in the outer edge of sidewalk created a dangerous condition for vehicles or travelers upon the highway, state was under no obligation to erect barrier between outer edge of highway proper and the sidewalk.—Marino v. "Cases dealing with the question do not permit the formulation of any general rule applicable to all cases as to the duty of a municipality or other agency in control of public highways to protect travelers thereon from danger incident to obstruction within the lines of the highway except that where the obstruction is of such a character as to seriously imperil the safety of travelers on the highway, there is a duty upon the municipality or other agency to exercise reasonable care to warn by adequate means the traveling public foreseen accidents.[96] A lack of railing commonly gives no right of action to the owner of a horse running away or beyond the control of the driver[97] unless the statute providing for railings clearly contemplates protection even against the fright of horses,[98] and it has been held that the action of an ordinarily safe and tractable horse, suddenly becoming frightened, in backing over an unguarded precipice is not always to be regarded as one of those extraordinary occurrences against which the public authorities cannot reasonably be expected to guard.[99]

Duty and liability of individuals The duty of guarding against, or warning of, danger from a defect or obstruction, and liability for a failure to do so, are also on an individual who has caused a defect or placed an obstruction on the highway.[1] A highway contractor who negligently fails to guard, or maintain proper barriers, lights, or other warning signals, at unsafe places near the work of construction or repair of a highway may be held liable for injuries resulting therefrom,[2] even though he acted without negligence in creating the dangerous situation,[3] and this liability exists regardless of the requirements of his contract with the highway authorities,[4] and irrespective of any liability on the part of the governmental body employing the contractor.[5] Under some statutes, however, the contractor is not so liable unless he has been di-

A contractor making a cut across highway or across well-defined and generally used roadway, whether public or private, or even across pathway so commonly used and so well defined as to amount to a roadway must display lights or erect barriers or must make safe entrance from intersected road at point of intersection or so near thereto or in such manner as that those who formerly used intersected roadway or any other traveler will readily see that he is to use the new way.—Shuptrine v Herron, 180 So 620, 182 Miss 315

Right to place barricade at certain point
A road contractor engaged in constructing a road had right to place an effective barricade at the point where the usable portion of the road ended and the unusable portion began.—Graves v Hamilton, 184 So 56, 184 Miss 239

In New Hampshire it has been held that a contractor engaged in improving and reconstructing a highway under a contract with the state and a town is not liable either by the common law or under a statute making any person liable for injuries caused by defects or obstructions due to his carelessness or negligence, for a failure to erect a railing at a culvert, although he has widened the worked part of the highway at that point, since the duty of keeping the highway in suitable repair is on the town or highway district, and the contractor performs his duties as far as travelers are concerned by exercising reasonable care and prudence in performing his work so as not to injure travelers in the exercise of due care.—Burroughs v Lane Constr Corp., 88 A 1001, 77 N H 124

rected to install such barriers or lights.[6] The duty to maintain such guards and warnings, and the consequent liability for a failure to do so, do not attach to the contractor after he has finished his work and it has been accepted by the municipality,[7] or, as has been held, after satisfactory completion of the work, but before formal acceptance.[8] Where the situation is such that the highway should be closed, if the contractor permits it to remain open for traffic he is not excused from liability for negligence by the fact that he has placed warning signs along the highway.[9] A possessor of land over which a public highway passes is not liable for his failure to warn travelers of a dangerous condition, not created by him, but known to him and not likely to be discovered by such travelers.[10]

Sufficiency of barrier, guard, or signal The barriers, railings, guards, or signals should be sufficient reasonably to warn and protect travelers on the highway, in the exercise of reasonable care,[11] and when so required by statute should be of a particular kind or character,[12] or should be such as are specified by the state highway department as standard.[13] Where the power of providing precautionary devices is in the highway commissioner, whether such a device is necessary and of the type best suited for the particular purpose rests with such commissioner,[14] and where an excavation is constructed through the commissioners for the use of an abutting owner, such owner is under no duty to take precautionary measures for the safety of the traveling public,[15] and he has no right to construct or maintain such signal devices without official supervision or approval,[16] and is under no obligation to initiate proceedings for the construction of such devices.[17]

A barrier or guard railing should be so constructed that it may be readily seen at a safe distance by ordinary observation,[18] if a wire rope or cable is used, other signals or warnings should be provided to make known its presence.[19] It should be such a barrier or railing as an ordinary man would maintain to make the road reasonably safe for the reasonable use of the traveling public under the circumstances,[20] but it need not be heavy enough to stop frightened animals[21] or to withstand a team and wagon coming in violent contact with it,[22] although a municipality has been held liable where control of a horse was only momentarily lost, and the accident would not have occurred had the barrier been of sufficient height.[23] It is not required that barricades should be placed around or in front of obstructions or other like situations of danger within the space included between other nearby barricades which are sufficient of themselves as a warning of danger.[24] If a contractor maintains warning signals and barricades at the termini of a highway under construction, and the condition of the highway itself shows that it is uncompleted, he need not place signals or flares at intermediate places on the highway,[25] neither is he required to keep lights during the daytime on all piles of road material needed during the construction[26] or to construct effective barricades around such materials.[27] The improvement of a portion of a highway is not notice or a warning to the public that the unimproved portion, if fit for travel, cannot be used for that purpose.[28]

Removal of barrier, guards, or danger signals. The municipality is not liable for injuries resulting from the removal of the barriers, guards or danger signals without its knowledge or consent[29] unless it has reasonable notice of such removal[30] and fails to replace them,[31] or has ground for anticipating the removal and fails to take action accordingly.[32]

Traffic signals. Where by statute the direction, maintenance, and control of traffic control signals and lights on state highways are placed under the supervision of the state, through its traffic commission, and the state has waived its immunity from liability therefor, it is liable for the negligence of its officers and employees charged with the duty of maintaining such signals or lights,[33] and it is not excused from liability for a negligent failure to maintain a proper signal device by the fact that the one in operation was proper and conformed to approved standards when erected,[34] nor does the fact that the legislature has failed to appropriate moneys for the reconstruction of a traffic signal system exonerate the state from liability for maintaining a dangerous signal device and failing to warn travelers thereof, where other similar signals have been removed without such appropriation.[35] Under a statute giving a town, through its town board, power to erect and maintain traffic control signals on the town roads,[36] the town superintendent of high-

A fixed base type traffic signal in center of highway, which was three feet in diameter, blended in color with pavement and was the only remaining stanchion on the highway, all others having been replaced by centrally suspended light panels, was a "nuisance", and failure of state to warn highway users of its existence was negligence.—Wenzel v. § 263. Notice of Defect or Obstruction

Liability for injuries caused by a defect or obstruction in a highway generally exists only where the municipality, officer, or person responsible for or causing the defect or obstruction had actual or constructive notice thereof. Notice to an authorized officer or agent is generally sufficient.

A municipality,[38] or highway officers having charge of the maintenance of the highway,[39] or a person causing defects or obstructions in the highway[40] are as a rule liable for injuries caused thereby to travelers only where they have actual or constructive notice of the defect or obstruction Where, however, the defect was caused by the direct act of the municipality or its authorized agent, the municipality is liable irrespective of notice,[41] and the fact that notice as a condition precedent to liability is expressly provided for by statute is immaterial[42] Where the municipality could not have prevented the accident if notified, notice is not essential[43] Another exception to the requirement of notice may exist in the case of statutes imposing in terms absolute liability for injuries from defects in highways,[44] and under such statutes the fact that the defect was latent is immaterial.[45]

The notice necessary is of the condition of things which constitutes a defect, and it is immaterial that the municipal authorities do not consider it a defect.[46] The notice also should be of the particular defect which caused the accident,[47] and not merely of conditions naturally productive of such defect and subsequently in fact producing it,[48] and should be notice not only that the defect existed but that it might become dangerous,[49] and that the object complained of is unnecessarily in the highway,[50] but the fact that the authorities have no reason to expect that the stoppage of water in a highway will render the road unsafe will not relieve them from liability for failure to exercise diligence after the defect has developed[51] The notice need not be in writing[52]

Implied or constructive notice Unless actual notice is required by statute,[53] constructive or implied notice is sufficient,[54] as where the defect was no-

ty highways acted under statute authorizing towns to enact ordinances and regulations relating to peace and good order generally, as well as under statute authorizing installation and maintenance of traffic standards —Cleveland v Town of Lancaster, 267 N Y S 673, 239 App Div 263, affirmed 191 N E 568, 264 N Y 568

torious or had existed for such a period that the authorities, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered and remedied it,[55] although under some statutes it has been held that, while notice need not be in any particular form, the authorities must have actual knowledge or notice as distinguished from notice implied from the long continuance or notoriety of the defect,[56] and that such actual knowledge or notice must be acquired at least a designated period of time prior to the damage sustained.[57]

In determining whether notice should be implied, the character of the highway as to frequency of use,[58] the nature of the defect as being plainly visible or the reverse,[59] the nature of construction, as being such that a defect may reasonably be expected to develop,[60] and that similar accidents had happened at the same place[61] will be taken into consideration, and, if the defect is latent, notice of its existence will not, in the absence of special circumstances, be imputed.[62] Notice that the highway at a particular point is generally defective will affect the municipality with notice of particular defects at that point.[63] So notice of a defect is sufficient to charge the municipality with notice of a particular danger arising therefrom.[64]

Notice to officers or agents. The notice need not be to the state or municipality in its corporate capacity,[65] but may be to any officer or employee in charge of or having some duties with respect to the removal of defects or obstructions.[66] The municipality is charged with notice if knowledge of the defect is brought home to the board of county commissioners,[67] the highway supervisor,[68] or a highway officer,[69] or even a highway officer de facto, acting under color of authority.[70] However, notice to one commissioner of a board of commissioners of highways,[71] or to an individual member of a town council,[72] or to a town clerk,[73] has been held insufficient; but, under some statutes, actual knowledge by the chairman of the board of commissioners is sufficient.[74] The knowledge of a deputy appointed by the town superintendent without authority is not imputable to the superintendent, and will not render the town liable.[75]

§ 264. Proximate Cause

Liability for an injury resulting from a defect or obstruction in a highway exists only where such defect or obstruction was the proximate cause of the injury.

To recover for an injury resulting from a defect or obstruction in a highway the defect or obstruction must have been the proximate cause of the injury.[76] To recover for injuries caused by a defective culvert, the accident must have occurred while the injured person was passing over the culvert, and its insufficiency must have directly caused the injuries.[77]

Construction of statutory liability

One travels on a culvert, within a statute making a town liable for injury to a traveler on a defective culvert, when he travels on the surface of the roadbed supported by the culvert—Chapman v Town of Lee, 119 A 440, 80 N H 481.

If the negligence of plaintiff was the proximate cause of the injury, as discussed infra §§ 268–274, or the injury was the direct consequence of such negligence as well as the defect in the highway, since it is impossible to determine what portion of the injury was caused by either, or that any substantial injury would have been sustained but for plaintiff's negligence,[78] the municipality is not liable However, the defect in the highway may be the proximate cause of an accident, notwithstanding the traveler's unconscious act or attempt in an emergency to avoid injury[79] By the weight of authority, where two causes combine to produce an injury, both of which are in their nature proximate, one being a culpable defect in the highway and the other some intervening occurrence for which neither party is responsible, and the injury would not have been sustained but for such defect, the municipality is liable,[80] and this rule has been applied where the negligent or wrongful act of a third person cooperates with a defect in the highway to cause the injury[81] In some states, however, it is held that the defect must be the sole cause of the injury in order to render the municipality liable,[82] and that, where there are two efficient, independent causes, the primary cause being one for which the municipality is not responsible, and the other a defect in the highway, the injury must be referred to the former[83] Under this rule the municipality is not liable where the wrongful or negligent act of a third person intervenes between the defect and the injury and is a contributing cause of such injury,[84] unless such intervening or concurring cause was pure accident, without fault or negligence on plaintiff's part,[85] or was due to the innocent act of a third person[86] Negligence of a person in leaving objects on a private way is not the proximate cause of injuries by such objects on a public road to which they had been removed by an unknown agency, which removal could not have been reasonably anticipated[87]

Escape of horses from control Although there is no duty to keep a highway safe for horses which have escaped from control or are running away,[88] yet where damage ensues from the fright or loss of control of a traveler's horse, caused by a defect in a highway, the municipality or person causing the defect is liable if plaintiff was not at fault,[89] unless some direct efficient cause intervened between the fright of the horse and the subsequent injury[90] Even where the horse is frightened by some cause other than a defect in the highway, plaintiff is entitled to recover provided the accident would not have happened but for the defect[91] or the circumstances were such that the authorities were bound to anticipate that accidents arising from the fright of horses might result from the ordinary use of the highway for purposes of travel[92] In some states, however, the loss of control of a horse, not due to the misconduct of the municipality, is regarded as the primary cause of the injury, for which the municipality is not liable, although the defect may have contributed to the injury,[93] unless the injury would have occurred even if the

§ 265. Persons Entitled to Redress

A person traveling on a highway in a usual and ordinary manner may recover for an injury sustained from a defect or obstruction.

A traveler on the highway[97] in a usual and ordinary manner,[98] whatever the purpose of the travel,[99] may recover for injury from a defect or obstruction, although such injury occurs during a temporary stop[1] It has been held, however, that if a person stops his horse outside the highway limits, and the horse gets loose and runs upon the highway, no recovery can be had for resulting injury,[2] although there is also authority to the contrary[3] One who is not in any sense a traveler usually cannot recover for defects,[4] as where he is using the highway for horseracing[5] A person leaning against or sitting upon a fence or barrier erected on the side of the road has been held not to be a traveler entitled to protection,[6] but there is also authority to the contrary.[7]

§ 266. —— Persons Violating Law

A person doing some act on the highway in violation of the law may nevertheless recover for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction, unless such unlawful act contributed proximately to the injury

A person may recover for an injury caused by a defect or obstruction in the highway, although he was at the time doing some unlawful act, if the commission of the offense did not contribute proximately to the injury[8] Unless the violation of law contributed directly to the injury, a recovery may be had, although the person injured was, at the time of the accident, traveling at an illegal rate of speed[9] or was violating the law by driving on the wrong side of the road[10] Under some statutes no recovery can be had if the load carried is heavier than permitted by law, notwithstanding the injury results from a defect in the road[11]

§ 267. —— Persons Bound to Repair

A person traveling on a public highway must exercise such care as an ordinarily prudent person would use to avoid injury from defects or obstructions, and if his failure to do so contributes materially to, or is the proximate cause of, his injury he cannot recover, notwithstanding such defects or obstructions

A person traveling on the highway is bound to exercise due care, such as an ordinarily prudent person would use, under the circumstances, to avoid injury from defects or obstructions,[14] and where his negligence contributes materially to, or is the proximate cause of, his injury he cannot recover, although the way may have been defective or obstructed,[15] as where the traveler is injured by a defect which is visible and patent,[16] unless he did not in fact see it and was not negligent in not seeing it[17] However, recovery may be had where the injured person's own fault did not contribute to the injury,[18] although he may himself have been in some degree negligent[19]

Right to assume safe condition In the absence of notice to the contrary, a traveler on a highway open to the public ordinarily has a right to rely on the assumption that the highway is in a reasonably safe condition for travel and free from obstructions,[20] and he need not keep his eyes constantly

Traveler may assume absence of dangerous impediment or obstruction of temporary nature in highway unless properly warned thereof by person responsible for its presence—Doherty v Romano, 135 A 62, 4 N J Misc 940

fixed on the road or path of the highway,[21] or look far ahead for defects which should not exist,[22] nor is he required to exercise such extreme vigilance as in all events to see defects or obstructions in the road ahead,[23] such as a chain stretched across the road.[24] The right to assume that the highway is reasonably safe, however, is subject to the qualification that the traveler must use ordinary care,[25] and it has been held that he must take notice of a legalized obstruction when lawfully maintained,[26] and must assume some of the risks and inconveniences inseparable from travel on a highway.[27]

In emergency The fact that a traveler when confronted with danger did not act in the best way or exercise that presence of mind required of a prudent person under ordinary circumstances will not preclude recovery,[28] although he is still bound to exercise such care as a person of ordinary discretion would exercise under similar circumstances.[29]

§ 269. —— Competency of Person Injured

A traveler on the highway who is under some physical or mental incompetency must exercise reasonable care, considering the nature or extent of his incompetency, to avoid injury from defects or obstructions.

A traveler on the highway who is under some physical or mental incompetency must exercise reasonable care, considering the nature and extent of his incompetency, to avoid injury from defects or obstructions in the highway.[30] The use of the highway by a person suffering under some physical incapacity,[31] such as blindness[32] or intoxication,[33] is not contributory negligence as a matter of law, but if the intoxication contributes proximately to the injury it bars recovery.[34] Permitting a woman[35] or a child[36] to drive a horse on the highway is not conclusive evidence of negligence. It is suf-

justifies assumption that portion of highway occupied by such tracks is reasonably safe for public.—King v Douglas County, 208 N.W. 120, 114 Neb. 477

Assumption that county has performed duty

Under statute providing that board of county commissioners shall be liable in its official capacity for damages received by reason of its negligence in not keeping a road or bridge in proper repair, as long as road remains open and public is invited impliedly to use it, those using it have a right to assume that county has performed its duty to them and that road is reasonably safe for travel in ordinary mode.—Sheley v Swing, 29 N.E.2d 364, 65 Ohio App. 109

§ 270. —— Knowledge of Defect or Obstruction

A traveler's previous knowledge of a defect or obstruction does not of itself establish contributory negligence, but imposes on him the duty of using reasonable care to avoid injury, and is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether he was guilty of contributory negligence

A traveler's previous knowledge of a defect does not conclusively establish contributory negligence on his part[40] He is not required to refrain from using the highway in order to be free from contributory negligence, and a traveler is not necessarily negligent where, although knowing of a defect or obstruction, he fails to bear it in mind at the time of approaching it,[41] or is mistaken as to its location,[42] or fails to realize its dangerous nature[43] However, knowledge of a defect or obstruction imposes on a traveler the duty to exercise ordinary or reasonable care, considering the nature and extent of the defect or obstruction, to avoid injury,[44] and, although it does not require the exercise of extraordinary care,[45] it does require the exercise of greater care than when traveling on other parts of the highway,[46] and may require constant vigilance,[47] as where barricades and warning signals are placed at a point where the highway is under construction or is undergoing repairs[48] A traveler having knowledge of a defect or obstruction has no right to act on the usual assumption that the highway is safe,[49] although it has been held that he may assume that an obstruction of which he has knowledge is not dangerous, unless he is warned to the contrary, or the danger is apparent on a casual inspection,[50] and in some cases, after the lapse of a reasonable time, there may be a presumption that the defect has been repaired[51]

It follows that knowledge of a defect or obstruction is to be considered with other circumstances in determining whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence,[52] and may in connection therewith establish such negligence[53] If the danger arising from a known defect is obviously of such a character that no one in the exercise of ordinary care would attempt to use the highway at that place, the use of such highway is contributory negligence and will bar recovery by the person injured[54] It has been held that the injured person cannot recover in such a case on the ground that he assumed the risk of injury,[55] but, on the other hand, other authorities have held that the doctrine of assumption of risk, as something apart from that of contributory negligence, has no application to highway cases[56]

§ 271. —— Choice of Ways

A traveler's use of an unsafe way when a safer one is available does not establish contributory negligence, unless the danger is so obvious that his use thereof, in view of his knowledge of a safer way, constitutes lack of due care

The mere fact that a person injured might have used another road safely does not conclusively establish contributory negligence,[57] but if he voluntarily travels on a route which to his knowledge is impassable, or so obviously dangerous that a person of ordinary prudence would avoid it, knowing the existence of another safe and accessible road, he cannot recover for resulting injury[58] unless the danger of which he has knowledge is not the proximate cause of the injury[59]

§ 272. —— Leaving Traveled Way

A traveler's deviation from the traveled part of the highway generally is contributory negligence unless the circumstances are such that his use of the untraveled or unwrought part of the road is justified or excused.

One who voluntarily and unnecessarily deviates from the traveled part of a highway and in so doing meets with an accident from some cause outside the traveled way cannot, as a general rule, recover for injuries sustained[60] The circumstances, however, may be such as to authorize recovery for injuries occurring on the untraveled or unwrought part of the road,[61] as where the traveled part is obstructed or otherwise unsafe,[62] or the deviation is accidental,[63] or it is necessary to turn out in order to pass another vehicle[64] A higher degree of care, however, is required of one going outside the traveled part[65]

§ 273. —— Traveling at Night

Traveling on the highway at night is not necessarily negligence, and only ordinary care, as determined by the particular circumstances, is required of such a traveler

It is not necessarily negligence to travel at night,[66] and a traveler in the nighttime may assume that the highway is in a reasonably safe condition [67] Only ordinary care and prudence, as determined by the particular circumstances, is required of such traveler,[68] although such care may call for greater vigilance on his part than in the daytime,[69] and failure to use such ordinary care may bar recovery [70] Failure to carry a light while traveling at night is not contributory negligence as a matter of law,[71] although the circumstances may render it such [72] Recovery is not prevented by the fact that the person injured was running instead of walking,[73] or that he was riding or driving at night faster than a walk.[74] The fact that one traveling at night had previous knowledge of the defect will not render him guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law,[75] but such knowledge requires the traveler to exercise the reasonable care of an ordinarily prudent man with like knowledge [76]

§ 274. —— Suitableness of Horses, Vehicles, and Harness

A person riding or driving on the highway must exercise reasonable care to provide himself with a reasonably safe horse and suitable harness and equipment, and if he does so and is injured by reason of defects in the highway he is not precluded from recovering because of defects in the harness or equipment, or vices in the horse, which existed without his knowledge or fault

Although it has been held that there can be no recovery for injuries caused by a defective highway if any deficiency in the horse, vehicle, or harness contributed to the injury, even though the person injured had no knowledge of the deficiency and was not at fault for want of such knowledge,[77] it is the general rule that defects in harness or vehicle, or vices in the horse, contributing to the injury will not preclude recovery if such defects existed without plaintiff's knowledge or fault,[78] or if the horse was one which plaintiff might reasonably drive on an ordinarily safe highway [79] However, plaintiff must exercise ordinary care to provide a safe horse and suitable harness and equipment,[80] although this rule does not require him to use the safest form of vehicle [81] One is not, as a matter of law, barred from recovery because he was driving a colt,[82] or a balky horse,[83] or a horse which was partially or totally blind,[84] unless he failed to use due care [85] Recovery for injuries caused by a defect in the highway and a horse shying or running away will not be precluded merely because the horse had shied or run away before,[86] but a person driving a horse which is timid or inclined to shy is bound to exercise more than ordinary care in passing obstructions [87]

a. Necessity

As required by statute in many states, in order that a person injured by a defect or obstruction may maintain an action to recover therefor he must file or present to the proper governmental body or authority a notice of his claim, in the time and manner prescribed by the statute.

In many states, under statutory provisions which have been held constitutional,[88] in order that a person who has been injured by reason of a defect or obstruction in the highway may maintain an action to recover therefor he must file or present to the municipality or person charged by law with the duty of keeping the highways in repair a notice of his claim, in the time and manner prescribed by the statute,[89] and, under such a statute, no matter how meritorious a claim for injuries may be, the court cannot entertain an action therefor unless the statutory requirements as to the notice of claim have been complied with.[90] Such statutory notice need be given only to the governmental bodies or persons included in the statute,[91] and except in cases where it is required by the statute[92] notice of the claim need not be given to a property owner or individual who caused the defect, as a condition to maintaining an action against him for the injury.[93] Such a requirement of notice has been held not to apply when death results from the injury.[94]

Waiver of notice. This statutory notice of claim cannot, as a general rule, be waived,[95] and it has

Presupposes completed highway

Statute requiring filing of claim arising from defect in highway within six months after accident presupposes a finished or completed highway thrown open to the public without restrictions, and not one in course of construction or under repair—Fernbach v State, 265 N Y S 881, 148 Misc 446

Construction of statute

In New York, County L § 6 a, providing that any claim against county, not specified in § 6, making county liable for injuries to person or property caused by defective highways and bridges, for death or for injury to person or property caused by negligent or wrongful act of county or any of its agents, officers or employees must be presented in writing within three months was not intended to apply only to actions other than those pertaining to defective highways, the use of the word "or" instead of "and" in the phrase "damages for death or injury to person or property" indicating an intention to differentiate—Hawkins v Oneida County, 38 N Y S 2d 844

General and special statutes

(1) Compliance with general statutory requirements relating to filing of claims against counties by claimants for damages for death of person allegedly caused by negligence of county in allowing dangerous condition in highway to exist is insufficient where specific statute relating to filing of claims for injuries to persons resulting from dangerous condition of highway and requiring filing of verified claim therefor controls—Cooper v Butte County, 61 P 2d 516, 17 Cal App 2d 43—Thompson v Los Angeles County, 35 P 2d 185, 140 Cal App 73

(2) General law, however, requiring that claim against county for personal injuries resulting from defective highway shall be presented to board of supervisors within ninety days after accident occurred controls where county charter contains no provision for filing of such claim before bringing action—Thompson v. Los Angeles County, supra.

County cannot be estopped by its action to set up a failure to comply with the statute as to notice as a defense—Cooper v Butte County, supra

In Kansas it has been held that, where an action for death has re-

been held that a vote of a town to pay damages, passed before notice given, or after the person injured has lost his rights by failure to give notice, is a mere gratuity on which no action can be brought.[96] Even if the requirement of notice can be waived, a mere expression by a town officer of a willingness to do what is right, together with a request to the injured person to make no expense about it, does not constitute a waiver,[97] nor is a denial of the claim made by a husband a waiver of notice of a claim by the wife.[98] The fact that the highway authorities, shortly after the accident which caused the injury, had knowledge of and repaired the defect is not equivalent to the statutory notice, although it may have a bearing on the right to relief.[99]

b. By Whom Given

The notice of claim should be given in the name of the person claiming damages

The notice of claim should be in the name of the person claiming damages.[1] A requirement that "any person" injured shall give notice includes minors,[2] and a father may give notice for his minor child when the statute provides that notice shall be given by a person injured or by another person "in his behalf."[3] Notice may be given by the administrator of a deceased person,[4] or by an agent or representative of the deceased,[5] but it should appear in whose behalf the claim is made,[6] although it has been held that a notice presented by the person injured, but signed by his attorneys who did not describe themselves as such, is sufficient.[7]

Husband or wife. A notice by a married woman alone is sufficient,[8] and a notice by a husband does not include a claim by the wife,[9] and, conversely, notice by a wife does not include a claim by the husband.[10] A notice, however, in the name of the husband, claiming damages for injuries to both,[11] or stating that the husband holds the town liable for injuries to his wife,[12] is sufficient.

c. Form and Contents

The notice ordinarily should be in writing, and should comply with the statutory requirements as to the matters to be described or stated therein.

The notice ordinarily is required to be in writing,[13] and, when written notice is required, defects therein cannot be supplied by oral statements to municipal officers.[14] The bringing of a suit within the time fixed for the service of notice has been held to be a sufficient compliance with the statute,[15] although there is also authority to the contrary.[16]

The notice should set out the claim distinctly,[17] showing that it is intended as a notice for the purpose of fixing the right of action,[18] although it need not, unless required by statute, expressly state the intention to hold the municipality liable.[19] It should describe, with reasonable certainty, the nature of the injury[20] and should describe with reasulted in a judgment for plaintiff, it was not ground for reversal that defendant pleaded and proved want of the required notice.—Leisenring v Pleasant Hill Tp., 193 P. 893, 108 Kan. 29

29 C.J. p. 706 note 32.

A notice that woman "got hurt" and that defective condition of road was cause of her "getting hurt" does not describe injury, as required by statute, to authorize recovery of damages for her resulting death, since word "hurt" might include any injury, whether very trivial or very sonable certainty the cause[21] of the injury, the time[22] and place[23] of the accident, and the damages claimed,[24] although it has been held that the amount of damages in dollars and cents need not be set forth[25]

The purpose of the notice is to put the local authorities in possession of the facts on which the claim is founded, with such reasonable certainty as will enable them to investigate such facts and thereby ascertain whether the claim is just, so that they may make either an appropriate settlement of the claim or an effective and intelligent defense to the action,[26] and where a notice is couched in such terms as are sufficient to enable an ordinarily intelligent person to find the place and understand how and when the injury occurred it constitutes a sufficient compliance with the statute,[27] and the fact that the municipal officers had seen the defect or obstruction may be considered in determining the sufficiency of the notice[28]

Waiver of defects in notice Failure to object to the notice when offered in evidence is not a waiver of material defects therein or of the right to take advantage of such defects later in the course of the trial.[29]

Saving clause. Under a saving clause in some statutes the notice is not invalid because of inaccuracy in stating the time, place, or cause of the injury, if there was no intention to mislead, and provided defendant was not misled thereby.[30] Such a provision, however, obviates only inaccuracies in the description of the injury and does not supply a lack of any description[31]

Amendment of the notice after the bringing of suit ordinarily will not be allowed[32]

d. Service or Filing

The notice must be served on or filed with the governmental body or officer authorized to receive it in the manner and within the time prescribed by the statute, unless, under the circumstances, a delay is justified or excused

The notice must be served on the governmental body or officer, as prescribed in the statute[33] It must be served, filed, or received within the time prescribed,[34] but under exceptional circumstances not attributable to the fault of claimant a notice given later than provided for in the statute has been held good,[35] as where claimant was bereft of reason by the injury.[36] Death is no excuse where the injured person lived for ten days in a condition in which he might have given notice.[37] Under some statutes a petition for leave to file a claim may be brought after the time limited has expired if the injured person was unavoidably prevented from filing his claim, and manifest injustice would otherwise be done,[38] and such leave ordinarily will not be denied unless it appears conclusively from the admitted facts, or plaintiff's petition, that he has and can have no claim against defendant.[39]

A statute relating to the time of filing a notice of claim ordinarily is not retroactive and does not, unless plainly so intended, apply to a claim accruing before, but not filed until after, the statute went into effect.[40] This does not dispense with the necessity of filing a claim before suit,[41] but such claim will be governed by the statute in existence at the time it accrued,[42] and it has been held that it is sufficient that the claim is filed before the institution of the suit, which is brought in due time.[43] The cause of action accrues at the time of the injury, within the meaning of a statute providing for the filing or presentation of the claim within a specified time after the accrual of the cause of action.[44]

§ 276. Actions

To recover for injuries to the person or to personal property caused by a defective highway the procedure designated by statute must be followed. An action to recover for such an injury is in some cases regarded as a private action for a public nuisance.

The procedure designated by statute as that to be followed in order to recover for injuries caused by a defective highway must be followed,[45] and, where alternative methods are authorized, a party cannot combine procedural steps of both methods, but must wholly pursue one or the other.[46]

An action for damages for bodily injury caused by an obstruction to a highway has been held to be a private action for a public nuisance.[47]

§ 277. —— Time to Sue, Jurisdiction, and Venue

Actions to recover for injuries to the person or to personal property, caused by defective highways, must be instituted after the cause of action has arisen and within the period of a controlling statute of limitations. At common law and under some statutes such actions are transitory, but under other statutes they are local.

Conformably to the rule applicable in civil actions generally, see Actions §§ 127, 128, an action to recover for injuries caused by a defective highway must be instituted after the cause of action therefor arises[48] and within the period of a controlling statute of limitations.[49] Under the statutes

Under a statute permitting a filing on leave of court where there was a reasonable excuse for failure to file sooner, where failure to give timely required notice occurred either through counsel's negligence or ignorance of the law, and township commissioners learned of accident within a few days after accident and repaired road within two weeks, the court should allow notice to be filed "nunc pro tunc" on the ground that petitioners had shown a reasonable excuse within the meaning of the statute.—McBride v. Controlling statute.
(1) Where statutes permitting the filing of actions against counties on claims arising from defective or dangerous condition of public streets and highways and providing for filing of a verified claim within ninety days after the accident contained no provision relating to the time within which an action on such claims may be filed, time within which such actions must be filed is governed by general statutes which must be construed with statutes authorizing filing of such actions.—Hennessy v. San Bernardino County, 117 P.2d 745, 47 Cal.App.2d 183.

in force in some jurisdictions such an action cannot be maintained until the municipality, board, or person charged by law with the duty of keeping the highways in repair has rejected the claim,[50] or has been served with notice thereof,[51] but under other statutes there need be no delay in bringing suit after notice of the injury has been given and claim for compensation has been made to the proper parties.[52]

Venue At common law actions for injuries to the person or to personal property resulting from defective highways were transitory,[53] and the same rule prevails under the statutes of some of the states,[54] while in others they have been made local.[55]

§ 278. —— Parties, Right of Action

The proper party to bring an action for injuries caused by a defective highway is the party injured, and all persons interested may be joined as defendants. The liability of different persons for the same injury is not joint where it arises from a violation of different duties. Under some statutes the cause of action does not arise until the claim has been rejected.

In case of injury to property from a defective highway the owner of the property is generally the proper party to bring the action.[56] All persons interested may be joined as defendants.[57] Under statutes which make a town, county, or other political subdivision liable for the neglect of the highway commissioner or other officer charged with the duty of keeping the highways in repair, but which do not prevent suit against such highway commissioner or other officer in his individual capacity, the fact that plaintiff in an action against the commissioner added defendant's title to his name, and alleged that he was commissioner, does not make the action one against the commissioner in his individual capacity.[58]

Where an individual and a political body are both liable for an injury caused by a defective highway, the individual as the author of the defect and the political body for neglect of its statutory duty to repair it, their liability is not that of joint tortfeasors, they are collaterally liable by reason of distinct, although related, torts for the same injury, and, therefore, an unsatisfied judgment against one will not bar an action against the other.[59] Liability as the basis for a tort action against both a contractor and subcontractor for injuries caused by barriers erected by the subcontractor cannot be predicated on the theory of a joint enterprise where each is engaged in a different work at separate points on a common project.[60]

Under the statutes in force in some jurisdictions the cause of action does not arise until the municipality, board, or person charged by law with the duty of keeping the highways in repair has rejected the claim.[61]

(2) Act granting right to institute suit against state highway department for death of motorist killed in automobile collision created a right of action, and any period of limitation fixed by the act governs—Cox v Louisiana Department of Highways, La App, 11 So 2d 409

(3) Where suit against department of highways for wrongful death of motorist killed in automobile collision was filed more than one year after death of motorist but less than one year after effective date of act granting right to institute suit, the suit was not barred by limitations in view of fact that the act creating the right of action did not prescribe a period of limitation—Cox v Louisiana Department of Highways, supra

§ 279. —— Pleading

a. General rules
b Declaration or complaint
c. Plea or answer
d Issues, proof, and variance

a. General Rules

The general rules of pleading govern.

The general rules of pleading governing civil cases generally, considered in the C J S title Pleading, also 49 C J p 30 note 1–p 886 note 58, particularly those applicable in negligence cases, see the C J S title Negligence §§ 183–202, also 45 C J p 1056 note 85–p 1145 note 25, apply to actions for injuries from defects in highways [62]

b. Declaration or Complaint

(1) In general
(2) Care on plaintiff's part
(3) Existence, nature, and location of defect
(4) Notice of defect or obstruction
(5) Notice of claim for injury

(1) In General

Plaintiff in his petition, declaration, or complaint must allege a cause of action in his favor and against defendant. Plaintiff may amend his pleadings in a proper case

The petition, declaration, or complaint should fully and clearly set out the facts which constitute plaintiff's cause of action [63] It should contain a full, clear statement of the grounds of defendant's liability [64] They should set out facts showing the existence and nature of the defect, and its location, as discussed infra subdivision b (3) of this section, defendant's negligence [65] at the time the injury occurred, [66] or its liability for the negligence of its officers, if the negligence of such officers is alleged, [67] the nature of injuries sustained by plaintiff, [68] that the negligence averred was the proximate cause of the injury, [69] and the damages claimed [70] Where the general duty of keeping highways in repair is imposed on defendant by a public statute, such duty need not be alleged, [71] or, at most, a general allegation as to such duty is sufficient, [72] without stating that it was imposed by statute [73] However, if the liability imposed is spe-

Allegations of negligence held sufficient

(1) Allegation that defendant's overturned tractor was naturally calculated to frighten a mule of ordinary gentleness was a sufficient averment showing negligence in leaving the tractor in that position, since very general averments, little short of mere conclusions of a want of care, meet the requirements of the law — Shelby Iron Co v Morrow, 95 So 370, 209 Ala 116

(2) For other cases see 29 C J p 710 note 82 [b]

Allegations as to barriers or lights

In action for injuries caused by washout in highway, complaint alleging that there were no barriers, lights, or any warning at or near approach to excavation at time of injury was held sufficient without allegation that proper barriers were not erected and maintained by road supervisor —Becker v Chapple, 232 P 538, 72 Mont 199

Sufficiency of allegation

(1) A count charging defendants with negligently leaving a tractor overturned by the roadside in a position which would naturally frighten a reasonably gentle animal being driven along the highway and that plaintiff's mule, which was reasonably gentle, was frightened thereby, and shied, throwing plaintiff from the buggy and injuring him, alleges facts from which the injury may be inferred as the unbroken sequence of cause and effect, and was not demurrable for failure to allege that the negligence proximately caused the injury —Shelby Iron Co v Morrow, 95 So 370, 209 Ala 116

(2) A count alleging negligence in failing to give warning of the presence of a tractor overturned alongside a highway, which was calculated to frighten animals of ordinary gentleness, was held not demurrable for failure to allege that the negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries when his mule was frightened at the tractor and threw him from the buggy —Shelby Iron Co v. cial and defined by statute, it is necessary in addition to set forth the facts which show the existence of such liability.[74] The declaration or complaint should also allege facts showing that it was duty of defendant to have kept the highway in repair at the time when the injury was sustained,[75] and it must allege that it was a highway erected or established[76] and maintained[77] by defendant political subdivision. The lack of sufficient funds to pay for repair of the highway is a matter of defense, and plaintiff need not allege that defendant possessed sufficient funds or the means of obtaining them.[78]

Amendment. An amendment of the declaration, not changing the cause of action, may be allowed in a proper case.[79]

Presumption after verdict After verdict plaintiff's pleadings will be presumed sufficient.[80]

(2) Care on Plaintiff's Part

As a general rule, although there is authority to the contrary, plaintiff, in his pleadings in an action based on negligence, need not negative contributory negligence; but a complaint which shows contributory negligence is bad.

Although it is held in some jurisdictions that plaintiff must show by direct averments or by the facts stated that he was not guilty of contributory negligence,[81] and that an allegation that plaintiff was free from fault is sufficient unless the facts specifically stated clearly show negligence on his part,[82] the weight of authority is to the effect that contributory negligence is a matter of defense and need not be negatived,[83] unless other matters stated by plaintiff show negligence on his part.[84] The fact that the existence of a defect or obstruction was unknown to plaintiff need not be alleged,[85] even in jurisdictions where contributory negligence must be negatived, an averment that plaintiff was without fault being equivalent to an averment that he had no knowledge of the defect,[86] and could not by reasonable diligence have discovered it,[87] and a general allegation that plaintiff was without fault is not overcome by facts pleaded showing such knowledge, unless these other averments are of such a nature that contributory negligence is necessarily inferable therefrom.[88] However, a complaint which on its face clearly shows contributory negligence is bad.[89]

(3) Existence, Nature, and Location of Defect

The petition, declaration, or complaint should allege clearly and with reasonable certainty the existence, nature, and location of the defect which caused the injury complained of.

The declaration or complaint should show the existence and nature of the defect,[90] and that the in-

Allegation held sufficient
Allegation that road was under the care and control of defendant and kept and maintained by it for travel, and that defendant was charged with the duty of keeping it in repair and free from dangerous obstructions, is sufficient without a further allegation that the road was a county-district road, as that conclusion will be drawn from the averments where such road is the only one which defendant controls and has the duty to repair and maintain—Clayton v Roane County Court, 123 S E 189, 96 W Va 333

Statement of defect held sufficient

(2) Other cases see 29 C.J. p 711 note 7 [b]

Negligence based on obstructions held not charged Where complaints in action for perjury resulted therefrom,[91] although, according to some decisions, a general description of the defect is sufficient,[92] at least when objection is not raised until after judgment.[93] The complaint should also describe with reasonable certainty the location of the defect,[94] as within a duly established public highway[95] in defendant political subdivision,[96] describing such highway,[97] and, if defendant desires a more accurate description of the place of the accident, his remedy is by motion to have the complaint made more definite and certain, or that a bill of particulars be rendered.[98] If a temporary obstruction caused the injury, an averment that it was there an unreasonable length of time is required.[99]

(4) Notice of Defect or Obstruction

In general, unless liability exists regardless of notice, the complaint must allege that defendant had notice of the defect or obstruction which caused the injury. If actual knowledge of such defect is essential to liability, it must be alleged

Where the facts show that the defect or obstruction was caused by the direct act of the municipality or its officers, the municipality is liable irrespective of notice, as appears supra § 263, and hence such notice need not be pleaded.[1] However, where the complaint shows that defendant municipality did not cause the defect or obstruction, it must allege that defendant had notice thereof, or must state facts from which such notice can fairly be inferred,[2] unless the statute imposes absolute liability on the municipality regardless of notice,[3] and a general allegation of negligence on defendant's part has been held to imply that it had notice of the defect.[4] In jurisdictions where actual knowledge or notice is required, as considered supra § 263, the petition or complaint must allege such actual knowledge,[5] and an allegation that defendant "knew" and could by the exercise of ordinary care have known of the defect has been held insufficient.[6] In an action against a member of a highway commission for injuries resulting from the negligence of highway employees while engaged in repair of the highway, a complaint which fails to allege that the commission knew of the condition of the road or had an opportunity to know is insufficient.[7]

(5) Notice of Claim for Injury

As a general rule service of a required statutory notice of claim for injury must be alleged

The declaration or complaint must, in most jurisdictions, allege that the statutory notice of claim for injury was served on defendant,[8] although some authorities have held that, since such notice is no part of the cause of action, service thereof need

sonal injuries resulting when plaintiff's horse became frightened from noises of defendant's stonecrushing plant were subject to construction that negligence based on obstructions in highway was not charged, trial court's ruling based on such construction was not disturbed.—Johnson v Wells-Lamson Quarry Co, 153 A 203, 103 Vt 178

not be alleged.[9] The notice need not be set out in full, a general allegation that the required notice was given being sufficient,[10] nor need the place of delivery be stated[11]

c. Plea or Answer

The general rules governing the plea or answer in civil actions generally apply. Matters of affirmative defense must be pleaded.

Under the general rules governing the plea or answer in civil actions generally, considered in the C.J.S. titles Pleading §§ 99–183, also 49 C.J. p. 179 note 58–p. 322 note 86, and Negligence §§ 196–198, also 45 C.J. p. 1113 note 37–p. 1124 note 4, which apply to actions of this nature, defendant, if he relies on matters of affirmative defense, must clearly state facts sufficient to constitute such a defense[12] In some jurisdictions defendant, if he relies on the contributory negligence of plaintiff, must allege it[13] The existence of the road as a public highway may be denied, as considered supra § 255 a, but such existence is not put in issue by a denial of a legal layout[14] An admission in the answer that some notice was served is not an admission that the required notice was duly served[15]

d. Issues, Proof, and Variance

(1) In general

(2) Variance between notice of claim for injuries and pleadings and proof

(1) In General

The proof must conform to the pleadings and all material allegations necessary to establish plaintiff's cause of action must be proved. Evidence competent to prove the various matters put in issue by the pleadings is admissible.

As in other actions, see the C.J.S. title Pleading §§ 520–523, also 49 C.J. p. 785 note 53 p. 791 note 13, all the material allegations of the pleadings necessary to establish plaintiff's cause of action must be proved,[16] unless admitted by the answer[17] Matters required by statute as a prerequisite to liability must be proved[18] In some jurisdictions proof of defendant's actual knowledge of the specific defect which caused the injury is essential to liability[19]

The evidence must conform to the pleadings,[20] and a material variance is fatal[21] However, slight and immaterial variances which do not mislead or prejudice the adverse party may be disregarded[22] Where plaintiff's injury may have resulted from several possible wrongs of defendant, he is entitled to present all of such wrongs as grounds for recovery in one suit and recover on one or another as the proof shows the facts to be[23]

A person injured by the dangerous approach to a highway, created by act of the selectmen some time before, may allege both the original negligence in creating the danger and the negligent failure to erect barriers or place lights, and may recover for whichever negligence the proof shows was the proximate cause of the injury, although a finding that failure to guard was the cause would preclude recovery for the original wrong.—Robertson v. Monroe, supra.

In determining what evidence of particular injuries is admissible, the complaint, notice of injury, and claim for damages should be construed together.[24] Plaintiff must generally prove the specific defect alleged,[25] but proof of defects not expressly mentioned may be admissible where their existence can fairly be inferred from the allegations.[26] Evidence that plaintiff properly filed his claim for injuries is relevant and admissible where plaintiff alleged that fact in his complaint and defendant denied it.[27] Under the general issue the usual defenses may be shown, as that the highway had no legal existence,[28] that the accident happened on the unwrought portion of the highway,[29] that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence,[30] or was illegally traveling on Sunday,[31] or that no notice of claim was given,[32] or, if given, was defective.[33] As before stated, see supra subdivision b (1), of this section, plaintiff need not allege the possession of funds by defendant for repairs, but, if he does, defendant may, under a general denial, show the lack of such funds, and need not plead that defense affirmatively.[34] Evidence admissible under the pleadings of one party will not be excluded because offered by the adverse party.[35]

Under the common-law practice, the injury should not be laid with a continuando, and, if it is so laid, it seems that plaintiff may, on objection by defendant, be confined in his proof to a single injury.[36]

(2) Variance between Notice of Claim for Injuries and Pleadings and Proof

The pleadings and proof must substantially correspond to the notice of claim for injury.

Plaintiff cannot recover for injuries not specified in the notice,[37] although he is not confined in his declaration and proof to the precise statement of his injuries contained in the notice.[38] The allegations of the complaint as to the cause and place of the injury, etc., should correspond with those of the statutory notice of claim,[39] but an immaterial variance will not affect the sufficiency of the pleading.[40] The notice and proof must be in substantial accord in respect of the cause[41] and time[42] of the injury, and the place where the accident occurred.[43]

b Admissibility
c. Weight and sufficiency

a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

Plaintiff has the burden of proving the essentials of his cause of action, but the burden of proving an affirmative defense rests on defendant. Circumstances may raise a presumption as to the existence of an essential fact.

Plaintiff has the burden of proving allegations which are essential to his right of recovery.[44] The burden is on him to prove the right of the public to use the highway,[45] that it is one which defendant has the duty to maintain and repair,[46] the de-

Plaintiff, claiming county not entitled to claim exemption from liability for injury caused by negligent operation of snowplow on the ground that at the time of the accident it was engaged in the performance of a governmental function because it was acting under a contract for a consideration and a resulting profit, has the burden of proving its allegations that the contract of the county with the state highway commissioner for the maintenance of the highway was on a profitable consideration.—Johnson v. Township road

fect therein,[47] that defendant had notice of the defect,[48] or actual knowledge thereof,[49] in jurisdictions where that is essential to liability, considered supra § 263, that the defect existed through defendant's negligence,[50] and that it proximately contributed to the injury[51] Plaintiff must prove his injury,[52] and, in jurisdictions where it is required, as considered supra § 275, due notice of his claim therefor to the defendant political subdivision[53] Under a statute providing that a notice of claim is not invalid because of an inaccuracy therein, if defendant was not misled, the burden of proving that defendant was not misled is on plaintiff[54]

The burden of proving any affirmative defense,[55] such as the lack of funds for repair,[56] rests on defendant

Contributory negligence. In conformity with the rules adopted in the particular jurisdiction, considered generally in the C J S. title Negligence §§ 210–212, also 45 C J. p 1170 note 33–p 1184 note 25, in some jurisdictions contributory negligence is a matter of defense which defendant must prove,[57] unless such negligence is disclosed by the testimony on the part of plaintiff[58] In other jurisdictions the burden is on plaintiff to show absence of negligence on his part,[59] although this is not necessary where defendant, by demurring to the declaration, admits the allegations therein of due care[60]

Violation of law Plaintiff must prove that he was lawfully traveling on the highway[61] It has been held under a statute providing that no person

lic road, plaintiff was required to prove the road a township road, although prior action against the county had been dismissed for failure of plaintiff to prove the road a county road—Irvin v Fant, 206 P 871, 111 Kan 336

Sidewalk

In action for injuries sustained in fall on sidewalk which was constructed about a foot from the macadam portion of the highway, burden was on claimant to prove that sidewalk had been constructed by the state or had been constructed on state's property—Marino v State, 15 N Y S 2d 640, 257 App Div 734 reversing 10 N Y S 2d 295, 170 Misc 341

Control over particular portion of highway

Where statute providing for appointment of commissioners of improvements and giving them power and authority over highways and streets in a town does not abridge the powers of the highway commissioners of the town but they are still bound to keep the highways in a safe condition for public travel, a person suing for injuries from a defect in a highway undergoing repairs under the commissioners of improvements need not prove that the defect was at a place in the possession of the commissioners of highways, from which they had not been ousted by the commissioners of improvements, as plaintiff is entitled to recover if he is injured in any part of the highway which is dangerous—McGuinness v Town of Westchester, 21 N Y S 290, 66 Hun 356

shall travel on the Lord's day, except from necessity or charity, that, when it appears that plaintiff was traveling on Sunday, the burden is on him to show that such travel was not in violation of the statute [62]

Presumption as to defect. A defect in the highway will not be presumed from the mere happening of an accident,[63] nor, on the other hand, can it be inferred from the mere existence of a highway, that it was wide enough to be safe and convenient for travel [64] A warning in the highway does away with the presumption that it, in accordance with law, is reasonably safe for public use [65] The circumstances may be such as to justify a presumption that the negligent act complained of was done by or under the direction of defendant [66] Where the unsafe condition of the highway is caused directly by the act of defendant or its employees, it will be conclusively presumed to have had notice of the defect [67]

b. Admissibility

(1) In general
(2) Condition of highway at other times and places, and subsequent repairs
(3) Similar accidents or absence thereof

(1) In General

Material and relevant evidence, competent under the general rules of evidence, is admissible in proof of the facts in issue.

The general rules as to the admissibility of evidence in civil actions, as considered in Evidence §§ 158–1015, particularly those governing negligence cases, as considered in the C J S title Negligence §§ 221–242, also 45 C J. p 1228 note 96–p 1260 note 91, are applicable to actions of this nature [68] Any relevant and material evidence, if competent under the general rules, is admissible on the questions of negligence[69] and contributory negligence;[70] the legal existence[71] and character[72] of the highway, the existence and nature of the defect,[73] and its location,[74] and the cause of the injury[75] and the damages arising therefrom [76] Defendant's actual knowledge of the specific defect which caused the injury complained of may be shown by any competent evidence, direct or circumstantial [77] The declarations of a highway commissioner made before the injury are admissible to show his knowledge of the defect,[78] also, the fact that defendant paid another claim arising from the same accident may be shown as his admission [79]

As a general rule, evidence of the custom or practice as to the care or condition of highways in the neighborhood or in other towns is incompetent,[80] although even such evidence has been admitted in some cases[81]

The fact that plaintiff was commonly a careful driver cannot be shown to prove the exercise of due care at the time of the injury,[82] nor can the opinions of a witness as to plaintiff's habits on other occasions be admitted to establish his negligence on the particular occasion;[83] but it has been held that plaintiff's previous habit of riding his bicycle on the sidewalk was admissible to show that he was riding it there at the time of the accident[84] Evidence of the character and habits of plaintiff's horse, and its behavior before and after the accident, is competent on the question whether plaintiff's negligence in driving a vicious or unsuitable horse was the cause of the injury,[85] but such evidence is inadmissible where there is no evidence that any misbehavior by plaintiff's horse caused or contributed to cause the accident,[86] and, where plaintiff was injured by the team of a third person, which had run away as a result of a defect in the highway, evidence that such team was in the habit of running away was inadmissible[87]

The opinions of witnesses as to the existence[88] or sufficiency[89] of the highway, or as to the negligence of plaintiff,[90] are incompetent, but it has been held that a witness testifying from knowledge and observation may give his opinion as to whether the particular object in the highway was calculated to frighten an ordinarily gentle horse[91]

In determining whether defendant town has used reasonable care to prevent or remedy defects, it is competent to show the population of the town, the extent of its highways, the amount of travel thereon, and the cost of repairing the particular defect.[92] In some jurisdictions it has also been held competent on such issue to show the assessed valuation of the town,[93] but in other jurisdictions such evidence has been held inadmissible[94]

Funds sufficient to make repairs Evidence as to the possession by the defendant political subdivision of funds sufficient to make necessary repairs is admissible where the lack of funds is a defense,[95] otherwise it is irrelevant[96] However, such evidence must be confined to the time of the accident,[97] and the possession of funds at such time cannot be shown by evidence of subsequent repairs[98]

Resolutions or reports as to the necessity of repairs Resolutions or reports of the municipal authorities bearing on the necessity of repairs at a particular point, or ordering them to be made, have been held competent to show notice of a defect at that point[99] On the other hand it has been held that the acceptance by the municipality of a report of a committee as to the condition of the highway was not competent as an admission that the highway was defective[1]

(2) Condition of Highway at Other Times and Places, and Subsequent Repairs

Evidence as to the condition of the highway at other times is admissible, provided it is shown to be the same as at the time of the accident, and evidence as to its condition and the existence of similar defects at other places has been held competent for certain purposes The authorities differ as to the admissibility of evidence of subsequent changes or repairs to show the defective condition of the highway.

29 C J p 716 note 4.

It is competent to show the condition of the highway at other times, before or after the injury,[2] where it is shown that the condition was the same as at the time of the accident,[3] or, as stated by some authorities, in the absence of evidence that the condition had changed[4] However, such evidence is not admissible where it appears that material changes have been made between the time of the accident and the conditions sought to be shown,[5] unless the changes are so explained that the jury cannot be misled,[6] or where considerable time has elapsed[7] and there is no evidence that the conditions were substantially the same[8] Evidence of the condition of the highway and the existence of similar defects at other places in the vicinity has been held competent for certain purposes,[9] such as to show due care on plaintiff's part,[10] but such evidence is not admissible to show contributory negligence in the absence of evidence that plaintiff was familiar with the conditions at the other places[11] In some cases the evidence has been limited to the condition of the highway at the defective place, and each way therefrom, only so far as it had any bearing on the sufficiency of such place and the safety or danger in passing it[12] Due care on defendant's part may be shown by evidence of the ordinary condition of like portions of similar highways in the same[13] or other[14] towns. So evidence of other similar defects in the vicinity is competent on the question of constructive notice of the particular defect,[15] as well as to prove on behalf of defendant that the particular defect did not present an unusual appearance[16] Defendant cannot, in order to evade liability, prove that a large portion of the roads in the town had similar defects.[17]

Subsequent repairs In some jurisdictions evidence is admissible to show that repairs were made to the highway immediately after the accident.[18] In other jurisdictions evidence of subsequent changes or repairs is incompetent to show the defective condition of the highway at the time of the injury,[19] especially in the absence of evidence that defendant town voted for the repairs or ratified them[20] However, such evidence may be admitted under special circumstances,[21] as where the fact that changes have been made appears only incidentally in the evidence by which the condition of the highway at the time of the injury is sought to be established,[22] or where it is admitted to show that evidence submitted of the present condition of the highway does not show its condition at the time of the accident,[23] or where evidence of a change is

Not an admission

Evidence of state highway department's action in providing for guard rails in road construction contract, and placing thereof accordingly after fatal accident, was held not admission by county, sued for death, that highway was not reasonably safe for travel at time of accident—White v Livingston County, 200 N W 973, 229 Mich 153

Not admissible as tending to disprove general custom

Where in an action for injuries received from driving into an alleged unguarded bridge excavation, the defense was that the placing of lumber and sand along the highway was a sufficient warning to travelers, defendant's testimony on cross-examination as to subsequent precautions in barricading the road was not admissible as tending to disprove the general custom, when it was not offered for that purpose, and its apparent purpose was to prove a subsequent fact at variance with the general custom, which tended to show that such custom was negligent—Whitten v McClelland, 120 S E 146, 137 Va 726

(3) Similar Accidents or Absence Thereof

In some jurisdictions, but not in others, evidence of similar accidents at the place plaintiff was injured, or the absence of other accidents at that place, has been held admissible to show that the highway was, or was not, defective Evidence of accidents caused by defects at other places is not admissible, unless the places are so close and the conditions so similar they can be considered as substantially the same

Evidence of similar accidents at the place where plaintiff was injured, and under the same conditions, has been held admissible to show the defective condition of the highway at the time of plaintiff's injury [25] In a few jurisdictions, however, evidence of other accidents has been held inadmissible,[26] especially where the other accident occurred long after the injury to plaintiff,[27] or long before such injury and under dissimilar conditions [28] Other authorities have held that evidence of what happened to other persons after the injury is inadmissible,[29] and that evidence of prior accidents is admissible only to show that defendant had constructive notice of the defect [30] That other persons have passed over the same defect at other times without accident has been held admissible in some jurisdictions,[31] but in other jurisdictions it has been held that evidence of the absence of other accidents is inadmissible,[32] at least where the conditions were dissimilar, or the accident to plaintiff was so peculiar as to put the highway to a test not furnished by ordinary travel.[33] Evidence of other accidents caused by defects on another part of the same highway is inadmissible [34] However, evidence of a similar accident on the day following plaintiff's injury, although a short distance from the place of such injury, is admissible where it appears there was no substantial variation in the condition of the road for the whole distance [35]

Fright of other horses Evidence that other horses were,[36] or were not,[37] frightened by the same object has generally been held admissible on the question whether such object was calculated to frighten horses, except where the conditions were not the same.[38] Some authorities, however, have held that the fact that other horses or animals were[39] or were not[40] frightened is inadmissible

The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence apply

In determining the sufficiency of the evidence in actions to recover for injuries from defects or obstructions in a highway, the general rules of evidence in civil actions, see Evidence §§ 1016-1050, are applicable [41] Under such general rules of evi-
